
HARRIS' SIDE
He sees his friends... His family... His everything.
HARLINA'S SIDE
She sees him... But her heart screams in fear.
How... How can I propose to him?
TWO HEARTS. TWO WORLDS. ONE STORY.
THE THIRD BOOK WILL UNITE THEM.
VOID WALKER
SEASON 5
THE THIRD BOOK
For him...
He wants to protect her heart.
She wants to give him her heart.
Peace after war. Love before destiny.

VOID WALKER SEASON 5 — CHAPTER 1: “Silence Before the Birthday Storm”

Morning light spilled across the sanctuary planet like a quiet apology from the universe itself.

Harris stood outside Harlina’s house, unmoving, as if time itself had forgotten to pass him by.

The war inside his mind was louder than any battlefield he had ever destroyed with Void power.

Memories of collapsing stars, screaming friends, and fractured timelines pressed against his chest without mercy.

Yet the only thought that softened the chaos was Harlina sleeping peacefully behind that closed window.

He didn’t knock, didn’t call, didn’t disturb her fragile peace after everything they had survived together.

He simply waited outside, like a guardian who no longer believed he deserved the title of protector.

Hours passed slowly, each one carving invisible weight deeper into his already exhausted heart and soul.

The sky changed colors, but Harris remained the same—silent, burdened, pretending he was just resting there.

Inside him, the Void stirred faintly, reacting to emotions he refused to acknowledge or let escape.

When Harlina finally woke, sunlight caught her eyes as she opened the window in quiet confusion.

She froze immediately, seeing Harris sitting outside like he had been carved into that exact spot.

Her breath caught, and she rushed outside without thinking, panic and concern mixing in her voice.

“How many hours are you waiting here?” she asked, her tone sharp but deeply worried underneath.

Harris smiled gently, pretending ease, and answered softly, “I just came now, don’t worry about it.”

But Harlina’s eyes narrowed slightly, because she had always been able to read his lies easily.

She didn’t question him again, choosing instead to hide her concern behind practical care and warmth.

She walked silently into the kitchen, preparing coffee with hands that trembled slightly with unspoken emotion.

Harris remained outside, finally moving toward the terrace, sitting down while staring endlessly at the sky.

Above him, clouds drifted like memories he could never fully hold or let go.

His phone vibrated suddenly, breaking the fragile silence he had been using to survive the morning.

Koji’s name appeared, and Harris answered immediately, sensing urgency hidden behind that familiar voice.

The message came like a blade wrapped in normal words, casual but devastating in timing and truth.

“Harlina’s birthday is day after tomorrow,” Koji said, unaware of how deeply those words would break him.

Harris froze completely, his breath stopping as guilt flooded every corner of his exhausted consciousness instantly.

He had forgotten it, not out of carelessness, but because survival had consumed every piece of him.

The burden of the cosmos, the Third Book, Omega signals, and endless battles had erased normal time.

For the first time in years, Harris felt something worse than pain—he felt like he had failed her.

His fingers tightened slightly, shaking, as silence grew heavier than any explosion he had ever witnessed before.

The Void inside him trembled, reacting not to enemies, but to guilt he couldn't erase or destroy.

Harlina returned moments later, holding a warm coffee cup with soft eyes and quiet concern.

She noticed his expression immediately, stepping closer and asking gently, "Why are you sitting here alone?"

Harris turned toward her slowly, forcing a smile that barely held the weight of his collapsing emotions.

"Nothing," he said softly, "I just came to see the sky… it felt different today somehow."

She sat beside him, placing the coffee into his hands, their shoulders lightly touching without distance.

For a moment, peace existed—small, fragile, and dangerous for someone like Harris to believe in again.

Harlina leaned closer slightly, her voice quieter now, asking hesitantly for something she had rehearsed before.

"Can we… go on a vacation alone?" she asked, eyes avoiding his as her cheeks turned faintly red.

Harris didn't hear it properly, lost in thoughts of birthdays, prophecies, and unread futures pressing on him.

He blinked, confused, and asked her gently, "Why alone? And… why today?"

Her expression dropped slightly, disappointment flickering like a dying flame she tried to hide too quickly.

She smiled awkwardly and said, "Just… for fun," voice soft, almost embarrassed by her own courage.

Harris still didn't understand her deeper emotion, but guilt twisted his decision into something else entirely.

He suddenly thought this was the perfect way to celebrate her birthday without revealing anything suspicious.

So he replied, "Let's go with everyone… five days vacation, together."

Harlina’s heart sank quietly, disappointment hiding behind a polite smile she forced into existence instantly.

“Okay,” she said softly, even though her eyes revealed everything her voice refused to admit.

Harris stood up quickly, deciding logistics in his mind like war strategies instead of emotional moments.

“Meet at railway station before afternoon,” he said, “I’ll call everyone and arrange everything.”

And just like that, he walked away, leaving behind a silence Harlina could no longer understand.

After he left, Harlina stood still for a long time, holding the cup he had touched.

Tears formed quietly in her eyes as she whispered, “When will you understand what I really mean…”

But the universe gave no answer, only wind passing through trees like unanswered feelings.

She turned away slowly, hiding her sadness behind routine movements she had learned to survive pain.

Inside her, hope and loneliness began quietly arguing for control over her heart.

Meanwhile, Harris walked alone, phone calls echoing in his mind like unfinished destinies.

Suddenly, a strange pressure struck his arm mid-step, sharp and unnatural like space tearing briefly.

He looked down—blood was already forming under his sleeve, injury deep and unfamiliar in origin.

His eyes scanned surroundings instantly, but the attacker had already vanished without leaving any trace behind.

Only silence remained, mocking him for being unable to protect even his own body anymore.

Without hesitation, Harris covered the wound tightly, suppressing pain with sheer will and discipline.

He forced a calm expression, walking toward a medical shop as if nothing had happened at all.

Inside, he wrapped bandages tightly, each layer burning like punishment for his continued survival.

Still, he smiled faintly—because smiling was easier than explaining the truth to anyone anymore.

Even pain had become something he learned to hide for the sake of others.

After dressing the wound, he bought simple clothes for the trip, ignoring comfort or preference completely.

Low-priced, practical, almost invisible—just like how he had started treating his own existence lately.

He returned home briefly, showered, changed, and prepared his mind like entering another battlefield again.

Koji's calls came repeatedly, but Harris ignored most until finally answering with tired anticipation.

Koji's voice was serious this time—"Turn on the news immediately."

Harris froze, then opened the broadcast, expecting information about enemies or cosmic disturbances.

Instead, he saw something far worse—his own face displayed on screen, labeled as a destroyer.

Footage showed "Void Walker" unleashing destruction on a town, energy warping reality beyond control.

Harris's breath stopped completely, confusion and shock freezing his entire consciousness instantly without escape.

For a moment, even the Void inside him felt uncertain about what it had witnessed.

Before he could react, Harlina's voice called from outside, knocking urgently for departure preparations.

He snapped back to reality, forcing the broadcast memory into nothingness using a quiet Void command.

The information vanished from collective awareness, erased carefully so no one would carry its burden.

Harris walked outside calmly, hiding everything behind a smile that no longer belonged to happiness.

He had become expert at pretending he was still human when he was something far heavier.

Harlina looked at him closely, sensing something missing but unable to define what had changed.

She dressed beautifully for the trip, trying to bring lightness into something that already felt heavy.

Harris, however, wore simple clothing, almost as if he didn't belong in celebrations anymore.

At the railway station, everyone gathered, laughing, carrying luggage, unaware of hidden storms inside one man.

Harris stood empty-handed, and Harlina immediately noticed—"Where is your luggage?" she asked softly.

He smiled lightly and replied, "I forgot to bring it," hiding his real reason behind simplicity.

But Harlina understood something deeper—he always forgot himself, never anything for others.

Without saying anything, she dragged him to a shop and insisted he choose proper clothes.

He refused at first, but her persistence broke through his resistance gently but firmly.

So she selected clothes for him, treating him like someone worth caring for even when he disagreed.

That simple act hurt him more than any battle ever had.

Because kindness was something he could not repay without sacrificing something else important.

They traveled together, eventually setting camp near a fountain surrounded by soft glowing waterlight.

Night arrived slowly, wrapping the world in silver silence and distant peaceful illusions.

Everyone ate dinner except Harris, who claimed softly, “I’m not hungry right now.”

Harlina looked at him carefully, but chose not to push further into his fragile silence.

Hours later, everyone slept, trusting peace that Harris no longer fully believed existed anywhere.

He walked alone to the fountain, removing his shirt to inspect the growing injury.

The wound had worsened, spreading like corruption resisting healing even through Void suppression techniques.

For the first time, he cried silently—not from pain, but from exhaustion of hiding everything.

He screamed without sound, fists trembling as tears fell into water that reflected broken moonlight.

No one was allowed to know—because knowledge meant danger, and danger meant loss.

Suddenly, Harlina woke and searched for him, eventually finding him near the fountain alone.

She stopped instantly, flustered, seeing him without shirt under moonlight and turning away quickly.

“H-Harris!” she called, still embarrassed but concerned about his strange behavior.

He reacted instantly, covering himself and asking sharply, “Did you see anything else?”

She misunderstood his panic, thinking he meant embarrassment, and replied softly, “No, nothing.”

Relief washed over him briefly, though pain still lingered beneath his controlled expression.

She asked again, “Why are you standing here like this at this hour?”

Harris smiled faintly, lying again, “Just… looking at the fountain and moon. It’s beautiful.”

Harlina stepped closer, sensing emotional distance instead of physical exposure now.

But Harris’s voice suddenly sharpened gently, “Don’t come closer right now.”

She paused, hurt but understanding, assuming he needed space more than comfort at that moment.

Before leaving, she whispered softly, “Don’t stay too long… please go rest soon.”

Harris nodded quietly, watching her disappear into the tent under fading night silence.

Alone again, Harris stared at the fountain, wondering how long he could keep everything hidden.

The burden of cosmos, friendship, love, betrayal, and unknown future pressed down like collapsing universes.

Somewhere deep inside, the Third Book waited silently, as if already writing his downfall.

And above him, the moon reflected a man who was slowly disappearing into his own lies.

To be continued…

VOID WALKER SEASON 5 — CHAPTER 2: “Birthday Beneath the Hidden Void”

Morning sunlight touched the sanctuary like fragile hope trying to survive inside an already broken universe.

Harlina dressed like a princess today, believing silently that maybe this time Harris would finally remember her.

Every step she took carried hidden expectation, carefully wrapped inside a smile she refused to let fall.

But Harris stood distant, pretending calmness, while his heart silently fought between love and impossible responsibility.

Inside him, the Void whispered constantly, reminding him that happiness always comes before something gets destroyed.

Friends arrived one by one, bringing gifts, laughter, and words that filled the space with forced celebration.

Harlina smiled politely, but her eyes kept drifting toward Harris, searching for even the smallest acknowledgment.

He gave nothing visible, no wish, no reaction, only silence that slowly broke her expectation piece by piece.

So she decided quietly, if he forgets today, she will also forget that she ever expected anything.

But inside her chest, something already started breaking slowly, without sound, without permission, without mercy.

Far away, Harris stood alone, speaking with a previous Walker who carried knowledge of fractured timelines.

He asked seriously about mysterious voices, Third Book fragments, and assassins targeting Void Walker's existence specifically.

The Walker responded carefully, saying disturbances in Omega-linked energy suggest Harris may already be part of Omega.

Harris paused, accepting it quietly, but his mind immediately questioned something deeper than identity or destiny.

"If I am connected… then where is the second book hiding inside this collapsing reality?"

That question hung between them like a sealed truth no one was allowed to answer fully yet.

The Walker warned that assassins were not random—they were tracking something inside Harris's evolving void.

Harris nodded slowly, understanding that every step he takes forward is already being observed silently.

Even then, his thoughts drifted back to Harlina, because today was supposed to be her happiness.

But destiny rarely respects personal promises when universes begin collapsing under hidden cosmic laws.

Meanwhile, Harlina finally reached emotional breaking point as hours passed without Harris acknowledging her existence.

She walked away from the crowd quietly, hiding tears behind polite expressions she had mastered long ago.

Inside her loneliness, she accepted the painful idea that maybe she was never important in his world.

But just then, Harris returned from distance, carrying silence heavier than anything she had ever felt before.

And for a moment, their worlds almost collided without either of them realizing it.

Harris secretly prepared everything near the fountain, arranging lights, gifts, and memories she never expected.

Each item he placed carried fragments of her hidden desires he had quietly observed over time.

Cosmetics she admired, dresses she hesitated to buy, shoes she always stopped herself from choosing.

A framed group photo, and another photo of them together, carefully preserved like forbidden memory.

He was building happiness while hiding injury, pain, and collapsing reality inside his chest.

Night arrived slowly, and Harris finally covered her eyes, guiding her toward the fountain with careful hands.

Her heartbeat rose instantly, confusion mixing with hope she refused to fully believe again after disappointment.

When he revealed the surprise, lights reflected across water like stars descending just for her existence.

Harris spoke softly, apologizing for late wishes, voice trembling as guilt and love collided inside him.

Harlina cried immediately, overwhelmed by emotion she had been suppressing since morning began.

She fed him cake gently, and for the first time, shared happiness without hesitation or fear.

He returned the gesture, their hands touching briefly, creating warmth neither of them fully understood yet.

She opened gifts with shaking hands, crying harder with each item that proved he remembered everything.

That night became fragile happiness, like peace existing only because war had not yet arrived.

And for a moment, even Void itself remained silent, watching them without interruption.

Later, she slept peacefully leaning against Harris beneath the tree, trusting him more than ever before.

Harris stayed awake, watching her quietly, still unable to fully decode emotions he was experiencing.

But deep inside him, something changed slightly, like humanity trying to return after long absence.

Yet peace never lasts long in a world already fractured by hidden cosmic interference signals.

Because somewhere beyond sight, something was preparing to interrupt this fragile moment permanently.

Suddenly, the same unknown force struck Harris again, more violently than before, targeting his right shoulder.

Blood spilled instantly, reality bending slightly as his body collapsed under overwhelming unseen pressure.

Harlina woke instantly, screaming his name, realizing celebration had turned into something terrifying and real.

Friends rushed in, witnessing for first time the hidden truth Harris had been carrying silently.

And the night transformed from birthday celebration into emergency born from invisible war.

At the hospital, doctors confirmed the injury was days old, impossible to survive without explanation.

Shock filled every room as they realized Harris had been hiding catastrophic damage all along.

Harlina entered slowly, her heart breaking as she saw him lying there barely conscious but smiling.

She slapped him five times, crying uncontrollably, demanding why he always chooses silence over trust.

Then she hugged him tightly, refusing to let go even while trembling from emotional collapse.

For the first time, Harris didn't resist emotional contact—he simply stayed still and listened.

Harlina confessed everything she had buried inside herself, finally revealing she loves him deeply.

Harris froze completely, shocked beyond battle comprehension, asking softly if he could respond later.

She smiled through tears, accepting his hesitation, still feeding him gently like she always cared.

And something inside Harris finally began shifting—acceptance replacing emotional isolation for the first time.

Then Harris began speaking seriously with the Walker again, now fully focused on truth and survival.

He asked about mysterious voices, Third Book fragments, assassins, and Omega connections spreading across timelines.

The Walker confirmed his suspicion, saying Harris is likely a broken extension of Omega structure itself.

Harris accepted it calmly, but repeated one question that mattered more than identity itself.

“Then where exactly is the second book hiding inside this system?”

That question fractured silence around them, as if reality itself paused before refusing to answer.

Suddenly, an unknown force pulled Harris violently away from the hospital room into distorted space.

His consciousness flickered, and distant Harlina’s crying voice echoed like memory trying to resist separation.

He woke briefly in unknown field, breathing heavily, sensing something watching him from beyond existence.

And far away, the birthday happiness finally ended, replaced by approaching truth and hidden war.

TO BE CONTINUED...

VOID WALKER SEASON 5 CHAPTER 3: THE WEIGHT OF UNSPOKEN HEARTS

Harris sat silently beneath the evening sky carrying countless burdens nobody understood while darkness slowly gathered around him tonight.

Thoughts collided endlessly inside his exhausted mind like storms destroying peaceful oceans without mercy leaving wounds unseen everywhere.

The Third Book remained unresolved haunting every decision while mysterious voices whispered warnings beyond ordinary understanding during nights.

Omega's shadow continued growing somewhere unseen while unknown killers hunted relentlessly through darkness searching for opportunities to strike.

Harlina's emotions weighed heavily upon his heart because he understood her feelings yet feared future tragedies immensely.

His friends unknowingly stood inside danger because remaining near him invited threats capable of destroying entire worlds instantly.

Every responsibility merged together becoming unbearable pressure crushing his soul beneath invisible chains forged through sacrifice and duty.

Harris lowered his head while memories flooded endlessly through consciousness creating painful echoes refusing disappearance despite desperate attempts.

Questions remained unanswered.

The voice remained unidentified.

The Third Book remained hidden.

Omega remained incomplete.

The future remained uncertain.

Suddenly—

A sharp slap landed across Harris's face.

Reality shattered through his endless thoughts immediately.

Harris blinked repeatedly before looking upward.

Harlina stood directly before him.

Her eyes contained concern.

Her expression contained frustration.

Her trembling hands revealed hidden fear.

"Harris."

Her voice carried undeniable emotion.

"Where were you mentally?"

The question reached deep inside him.

Harris smiled weakly.

The smile failed hiding exhaustion.

Everyone nearby immediately noticed.

Koji folded his arms seriously.

Lunar watched carefully.

Others remained silent.

Harlina narrowed her eyes.

"First question."

She stepped closer.

"The hidden injuries."

Silence followed briefly.

Harris released a long breath.

Then slowly began speaking.

The story unfolded gradually.

Every injury.

Every battle.

Every hidden sacrifice.

Every sleepless night.

Every secret decision.

Hours continued passing.

Nobody interrupted him.

Nobody moved significantly.

The atmosphere remained heavy.

Three entire hours disappeared beneath conversation.

Each revelation shocked everyone further.

Several moments forced complete silence because words became insufficient describing everything Harris experienced alone recently.

When his explanation finally ended nobody spoke immediately because emotional weight overwhelmed ordinary responses completely throughout surroundings.

Koji eventually broke silence first.

His expression became serious.

"The killer."

Harris immediately understood.

Koji continued speaking.

"Who exactly was he?"

The memory returned instantly.

A terrifying presence.

Invisible attacks.

Unbelievable strength.

Unnatural pressure.

Harris slowly answered.

"I don't know completely."

Everyone focused intensely.

"But."

His eyes darkened.

"He might belong to Omega."

Shock spread immediately.

Lunar frowned deeply.

Koji clenched his fists.

Others exchanged worried looks.

Harris continued quietly.

"His power exceeded expectations."

The memory disturbed him.

"I couldn't properly see him."

Silence returned.

Nobody expected that answer.

If Harris failed tracking somebody then danger surpassed ordinary measurements significantly creating concern among everyone present immediately.

Lunar eventually leaned forward.

"Any leads from previous Void Walkers?"

The question changed everything.

Harris froze momentarily.

His expression shifted.

The Third Book.

The mysterious pages.

The strange discoveries.

The hidden warnings.

He slowly nodded.

"There is something."

Everyone waited.

Harris began explaining.

The room gradually became colder.

Every detail regarding the Third Book emerged carefully through conversation revealing mysteries beyond imagination and comprehension completely.

Ancient knowledge.

Missing pages.

Forgotten warnings.

Previous Void Walkers.

Unexplained symbols.

Growing anomalies.

Nobody interrupted.

Nobody breathed comfortably.

Then suddenly—

Pain exploded inside Harris's head.

His eyes widened.

A powerful pressure struck consciousness violently.

The room spun uncontrollably.

Voices distorted.

Reality blurred.

"HARRIS!"

Harlina shouted immediately.

Everything vanished.

His body collapsed.

Darkness consumed everything.

Panic erupted instantly.

Harlina rushed forward desperately.

Koji grabbed Harris's shoulders.

Lunar attempted waking him.

Others called repeatedly.

No response arrived.

No movement appeared.

No reaction emerged.

Harris remained completely unconscious.

Then—

Darkness transformed.

An endless void appeared before him.

Countless floating pages drifted through infinite space while distant stars shattered silently throughout mysterious surroundings endlessly.

Harris slowly opened his eyes.

The familiar voice returned.

Calm.

Ancient.

Impossible.

Mysterious.

The voice spoke quietly.

"Void Walker."

Harris immediately recognized it.

"You again."

Silence followed briefly.

The voice remained emotionless.

"You are approaching truth."

Floating pages illuminated gradually.

Ancient symbols glowed.

Fragments of forgotten memories appeared.

Previous Void Walkers flashed momentarily before disappearing again into darkness surrounding everything endlessly beyond comprehension and understanding.

Harris stepped forward cautiously.

"Who are you?"

No answer arrived.

Instead—

The voice continued.

"Read the Second Book completely."

The instruction echoed endlessly.

Harris frowned.

"What is hidden there?"

The voice ignored the question.

More pages appeared.

Ancient arrows emerged through glowing visions.

Broken worlds followed.

Destroyed civilizations.

Collapsed dimensions.

Then another statement emerged.

"Find the parts of Omega."

Harris's heart tightened immediately.

The voice continued.

"Time decreases rapidly."

A terrifying pressure filled surroundings.

Harris clenched his fists.

"What are Omega's parts?"

Silence.

Again.

No answer.

Frustration grew.

"Who are you?"

The question echoed repeatedly.

The voice remained silent.

Several moments passed.

Then finally—

One final statement emerged.

The atmosphere changed completely.

Every floating page froze.

Every light disappeared.

Every sound vanished.

The voice spoke.

"Find the True Eternal Arrow."

The words shook existence itself.

Harris's eyes widened instantly.

"What is that?"

No response arrived.

The voice vanished completely.

Darkness collapsed.

Reality shattered.

Harris suddenly awakened.

A violent breath escaped immediately.

Fear covered his face.

Sweat drenched his body.

Everyone rushed closer instantly.

"HARRIS!"

Harlina's voice trembled heavily.

He stared forward silently.

The message continued echoing endlessly within his mind long after returning from mysterious encounter beyond reality itself.

The following conversations continued.

Questions followed questions.

Theories followed theories.

Concerns followed concerns.

Hours became days.

Days became discussions.

Two entire days disappeared.

Everyone attempted understanding impossible mysteries surrounding books Omega and mysterious voices controlling hidden truths from darkness.

Eventually exhaustion overcame everyone.

Night arrived.

Silence returned.

One by one they departed.

Koji left reluctantly.

Lunar promised continued investigation.

Others returned home.

Only one person remained.

Harlina.

She sat beside Harris quietly.

At some point exhaustion defeated her.

She fell asleep.

Harris noticed immediately.

His expression softened.

She slept beside him.

One hand remained holding his.

Tear marks covered her cheeks.

Evidence remained undeniable.

She cried extensively before sleeping.

The realization struck deeply.

Harris stared silently.

His chest tightened painfully.

For several moments he simply watched.

No battles.

No mysteries.

No Omega.

Only Harlina.

Only peace.

Only quiet affection.

A deep breath escaped him.

Then another.

For the first time recently—

He relaxed.

Completely.

A decision formed quietly inside his heart.

No matter what happened.

No matter who appeared.

No matter what Omega planned.

No matter what the Third Book revealed.

He would save everyone.

Absolutely everyone.

The night continued peacefully.

Hours passed slowly.

Harris remained awake.

Watching Harlina.

Watching her breathing.

Watching her peaceful expression.

Watching someone precious.

A strange warmth filled his heart.

Happiness.

Simple happiness.

The feeling surprised him.

Morning eventually arrived.

Golden sunlight entered gently.

Harlina slowly awakened.

Her eyes opened.

She immediately noticed something.

Harris still stared directly at her.

For hours.

Without stopping.

Her face instantly turned red.

"H-Harris?!"

Embarrassment exploded immediately.

She looked away desperately.

Then looked back.

Then panicked further.

A moment later—

SLAP!

Her hand landed heavily.

Harris's face shifted sideways.

The force surprised everyone nearby.

Harlina froze.

Her hand remained attached against his cheek.

Several seconds passed.

Absolute silence followed.

Then panic overtook her.

"S-SORRY!"

She immediately apologized.

Harris touched his cheek.

Then smiled.

"It's okay."

The answer shocked her.

He continued softly.

"It's okay for everything."

The words reached her heart instantly.

Her eyes widened.

Hope appeared.

Emotion overflowed.

"Harris..."

His next statement changed everything.

"I accept your feelings."

Time stopped.

Harlina froze completely.

Several seconds passed.

Then tears appeared immediately.

Not sadness.

Not fear.

Pure happiness.

She launched forward suddenly.

Wrapping both arms around him tightly.

Holding him desperately.

As though releasing years of hidden emotions finally freed from silence completely forever after endless waiting and hope.

Harris slowly returned the embrace.

For the first time.

A truly happy beginning started.

Weeks passed peacefully afterward.

Recovery continued gradually.

Eventually Harris returned home.

Though temporary recovery remained incomplete.

The atmosphere changed dramatically.

Harlina became happiest.

She visited constantly.

She brought food.

She prepared meals.

She monitored medicine.

She forced sleeping schedules.

She refused allowing reckless behavior.

Every day contained care.

Every day contained affection.

Every day contained happiness.

Harris experienced emotions difficult expressing openly.

He simply treasured every moment quietly.

Eventually his body recovered significantly.

Strength returned steadily.

One morning he announced confidently.

"I recovered."

Harlina immediately disagreed.

"No."

Harris blinked.

"No?"

"No."

Her answer remained absolute.

"More rest."

The argument lasted hours.

She won completely.

Several days later—

Everything changed again.

Harlina suddenly became sick.

Extremely sick.

Her condition worsened rapidly.

Hospitalization became necessary.

Harris's world stopped instantly.

Fear returned.

Memories returned.

Loss returned.

He remained beside her constantly.

Feeding food carefully.

Providing medicine patiently.

Adjusting blankets quietly.

Protecting her endlessly.

Days passed.

Then more days.

He never left.

Never rested properly.

Never slept properly.

Never ate enough.

He simply watched.

Waited.

Prayed silently.

Harlina remained unconscious.

The sight devastated him repeatedly.

Many nights he whispered quietly beside her bed hoping somehow she could hear every word despite unconsciousness.

Eventually—

One week passed.

Then finally—

She recovered.

Relief overwhelmed him.

But fate refused peace.

That same period.

Harris sensed something.

A familiar presence.

Near the Second Book.

His eyes widened immediately.

The same force.

The same feeling.

The same enemy.

Then suddenly—

Chaos erupted.

Invisible attacks struck instantly.

Harlina screamed.

Pain exploded through both hands.

Blood appeared immediately.

Harris froze.

Shock overwhelmed him.

"HARLINA!"

Rage erupted instantly.

A completely new power awakened.

Void energy transformed violently.

Reality distorted around him.

The attacker retreated briefly.

But Harlina continued screaming painfully.

The sound shattered Harris emotionally.

He immediately deactivated everything.

Power no longer mattered.

Only Harlina mattered.

He carried her immediately.

Running toward emergency treatment desperately.

Then another attack struck.

His right hand suffered injury.

Another impact tore across left shoulder.

Pain exploded.

Blood followed.

Still—

He never stopped running.

Never slowed.

Never hesitated.

Harlina reached safety.

Treatment began immediately.

Harris received temporary treatment only.

Nothing more.

Anger consumed him completely.

The attacker escaped.

Days followed.

Harris became obsessed.

Training intensified relentlessly.

Protection increased constantly.

He guarded Harlina day and night.

Sleep disappeared.

Food disappeared.

Rest disappeared.

Treatment disappeared.

His body weakened rapidly.

Yet he continued.

Every day.

Every night.

Every moment.

Two weeks passed.

Finally—

Harlina awakened completely.

Her eyes slowly opened.

The first thing she saw—

Harris.

His appearance shocked her.

Dark circles.

Bandaged wounds.

Exhaustion.

Weight loss.

Pain.

She immediately cried.

Tears flowed endlessly.

"Harris..."

Her voice trembled.

"Who keeps hurting you?"

No answer arrived.

Instead—

Harris hugged her suddenly.

For the first time.

Completely.

His body shook.

Then tears appeared.

Real tears.

The tears he hid endlessly.

Emotion finally escaped.

"I thought I lost you."

The confession shattered her heart completely.

All hidden suffering became visible.

All hidden fear became visible.

All hidden love became visible.

Harlina cried harder.

Holding him tightly.

"I won't leave."

Her voice trembled.

"I won't leave you alone."

The promise echoed gently.

Then suddenly—

Harris collapsed.

Consciousness vanished immediately.

Panic returned instantly.

Doctors rushed quickly.

Examinations followed.

Results arrived later.

The diagnosis remained simple.

Severe exhaustion.

Sleep deprivation.

Malnutrition.

Untreated injuries.

Overexertion.

Harlina became furious.

Absolutely furious.

She waited.

Patiently.

For his awakening.

Two days later—

Harris finally opened his eyes.

Several moments passed quietly.

Then—

SLAP!

Another powerful slap landed immediately.

Harlina stood nearby holding food.

Tears filled her eyes.

Anger filled her voice.

"You idiot!"

She continued yelling endlessly.

Scolding him repeatedly.

Feeding him forcefully.

Demanding explanations.

Demanding promises.

Demanding better behavior.

Harris listened quietly.

Then smiled.

Strangely—

He enjoyed every second.

Because beneath every angry word existed overwhelming love impossible hiding despite determined attempts and emotional frustration completely.

Elsewhere.

Far away.

Lunar continued investigating relentlessly.

Searching records.

Searching ruins.

Searching forgotten histories.

Then finally—

A discovery emerged.

A clue connected directly to the Third Book.

Lunar's eyes widened immediately.

Because the clue revealed something impossible.

Something ancient.

Something terrifying.

Something capable of changing everything.

And somewhere beyond darkness—

A hidden page turned itself.

The Third Book awakened further.

TO BE CONTINUED...

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 4: THE PATH TO THE THIRD BOOK

The hospital room remained peaceful, but Harris's heart was already racing toward the mystery waiting somewhere beyond distant stars.

Days earlier he had nearly died again, yet thoughts of danger never stopped his relentless pursuit of answers.

Lunar suddenly rushed inside carrying ancient documents, his expression revealing excitement unlike anything witnessed recently by anyone.

Everyone immediately focused upon him.

Even Harris sat upright despite the pain spreading through every part of his recovering body.

Lunar placed several papers upon the table.

His hands were shaking.

His eyes sparkled.

"I found it."

The room became silent.

Koji nearly jumped from his chair.

"What did you find?"

Lunar pointed carefully toward an ancient symbol.

"The clue."

"The clue leading toward the Third Book."

For several seconds nobody spoke.

Then Harris smiled.

Not a normal smile.

A smile filled with relief.

Hope.

Determination.

Years of searching.

Years of questions.

Years of wondering whether the Third Book even existed.

Now they finally had a path.

Without hesitation Harris attempted standing.

Pain shot through his body.

He ignored it completely.

His feet moved toward the hospital door.

His mind already focused upon the journey ahead.

Before reaching the exit—

SLAP.

The sound echoed throughout the room.

Everyone froze.

Harris slowly turned.

Harlina stood there.

Her eyes were filled with frustration.

And fear.

"You are not leaving."

Harris rubbed his cheek.

Fearfully smiling.

"Just a small trip."

Another glare.

"No."

"You almost died."

"You are staying."

"For several days."

Harris looked toward Lunar.

Lunar immediately looked away.

Koji looked away too.

Nobody wanted involvement.

Harlina crossed her arms.

Her decision was final.

For perhaps the first time in existence...

Void Walker surrendered.

Fearfully smiling again.

"Okay."

That night...

The hospital became quiet.

The moon illuminated the room.

Everyone slept peacefully.

Or at least appeared to.

Harris slowly opened his eyes.

He carefully sat up.

Every movement was silent.

His injuries screamed.

His body protested.

His mind ignored everything.

The Third Book waited.

He could not rest.

He gently lifted sleeping Harlina.

Carefully placing her upon his bed.

For a moment he stared at her peaceful face.

A small smile appeared.

Then he moved toward the door.

One step.

Two steps.

Three steps.

Suddenly—

THUD.

Harris crashed onto the floor.

Confused.

He looked downward.

A rope.

Attached to his leg.

Following the rope...

Directly toward Harlina's hand.

The moment he realized everything—

Harlina opened one eye.

"I knew it."

Harris froze.

Like a criminal caught instantly.

She slowly sat up.

"You were going out."

Fearfully smiling.

"No."

"I was going to the restroom."

Silence.

Another silence.

Then—

SLAP.

Again.

Even louder.

Koji nearly fell from his chair after waking suddenly.

Lunar jumped.

Harris accepted fate.

Harlina pointed directly toward him.

"Why are you lying?"

"Why?"

"Do you think I don't know you anymore?"

Tears began appearing within her eyes.

"You keep risking yourself."

"You keep getting hurt."

"You keep returning half dead."

"And you still won't rest."

The room became silent again.

Harris couldn't answer.

Because she was right.

Then—

Everything changed.

A sudden pressure filled the room.

Cold.

Heavy.

Terrifying.

Harris's smile disappeared instantly.

His eyes widened.

His entire body trembled.

The presence.

The same presence.

The killer.

Without warning Harris grabbed Harlina.

Holding her tightly.

Then he ran.

Through hallways.

Through exits.

Across streets.

Far away from the hospital.

Only after reaching safety did he finally stop.

Harlina looked confused.

Then concerned.

Then frightened.

"Harris."

"Why are you shaking?"

Harris stared toward darkness.

His voice became serious.

"The killer."

"He returned."

Immediately Harlina understood.

The atmosphere changed.

Harris took a deep breath.

"You stay behind."

"I'll find the Third Book."

"I'll handle everything."

"No."

Harlina answered instantly.

"No hesitation."

"No fear."

"No compromise."

"If you go."

"I go."

Harris argued.

Again.

Again.

And again.

Explaining dangers.

Threats.

Death.

Unknown enemies.

His damaged body.

Everything.

Yet Harlina never moved.

Never changed.

Never surrendered.

Finally Harris sighed.

Defeated completely.

"Okay."

Her face brightened.

"But one condition."

"You stay beside me always."

"Never leave my side."

Harlina smiled.

The smile Harris treasured most.

"Deal."

Soon afterward Lunar and Koji joined them.

The journey finally began.

Days passed.

The journey became exhausting.

Dangerous.

Unpredictable.

Harris remained alert every moment.

Watching every shadow.

Every movement.

Every possibility.

He barely slept.

Barely rested.

Barely ate.

Each day his condition worsened.

Each day Harlina worried more.

One afternoon she offered food.

Harris refused.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Finally—

SLAP.

Koji immediately looked away.

Lunar pretended studying maps.

Harris touched his cheek.

Confused.

Harlina held food toward him.

"Eat."

"No."

"Eat."

"No."

The argument continued.

For nearly thirty minutes.

Finally Harlina placed the food aside.

Her voice became quieter.

Then sadder.

"If you don't eat."

"I won't eat either."

Those words struck harder than any enemy attack.

Harris slowly looked toward her.

She wasn't joking.

Not even slightly.

Koji quietly wiped tears.

Because everyone knew.

Harlina would absolutely do it.

Several moments passed.

Then Harris accepted defeat.

Again.

He began eating.

Immediately Harlina's face brightened.

Like sunlight returning after endless storms.

She happily fed him herself.

Piece after piece.

Smile after smile.

Koji started crying openly.

Nobody mocked him.

Because everyone felt emotional.

For a brief moment...

They looked like a family.

A real family.

The kind Harris always protected.

The kind he feared losing.

Then one night...

Under a brilliant full moon...

The clue awakened.

Ancient symbols floated into the sky.

Silver light covered everything.

The air itself trembled.

Harris immediately sensed it.

His heart pounded.

"The Third Book."

"It is here."

At last.

After years.

After suffering.

After endless searching.

The Third Book appeared.

Floating above an ancient altar.

Covered by moonlight.

Radiating mysterious energy.

Everyone stared silently.

But Harris suddenly felt something else.

The killer.

Again.

Stronger.

Closer.

Immediately Harris grabbed the Third Book.

Then threw it toward Lunar.

"TAKE IT!"

"RUN!"

"TAKE HARLINA!"

Everyone froze.

The killer emerged.

And the world itself seemed to stop.

Because standing there...

Was Harris.

The same face.

The same eyes.

The same voice.

The same appearance.

The duplicate smiled.

"I will replace you."

"I will become Void Walker."

And the battle began.

A battle that shook the entire region.

A battle between identical warriors.

A battle nobody could understand.

Minutes passed.

Neither side gained advantage.

Both fought perfectly.

Both moved identically.

Both attacked identically.

Confusion spread.

Even Harlina struggled.

Then injuries appeared.

The real Harris bled.

Again.

And again.

And again.

The duplicate remained untouched.

Koji noticed first.

His heart sank.

Then Harlina stepped forward.

She asked a question.

"A secret."

"The secret I told you."

The real Harris blinked.

Confused.

"What secret?"

The duplicate smiled.

"I forgot."

At that exact moment—

Harlina smiled.

She finally knew.

Because there was no secret.

Never had been.

They never needed one.

Trust alone connected them.

The duplicate realized his mistake.

Too late.

He escaped.

But victory came at a terrible cost.

Harris collapsed.

Completely unconscious.

Two more weeks passed.

Hospital walls surrounded him again.

Machines beeped endlessly.

Doctors worried constantly.

Each attack damaged his body further.

Each battle consumed more strength.

Each day Harlina cried beside him.

Holding his hand.

Praying silently.

Begging him to wake up.

Then finally—

His eyes opened.

The first thing he saw...

Was Harlina.

The moment she realized he awakened—

She hugged him.

Immediately.

Tightly.

Desperately.

Crying uncontrollably.

All fear.

All pain.

All loneliness.

Exploded outward.

Harris gently hugged her back.

Despite weakness.

Despite pain.

Despite exhaustion.

His voice remained soft.

"I'll save you."

"Even if I die."

Harlina cried harder.

Refusing to let go.

Because hearing those words hurt more than comforted her.

She didn't want sacrifice.

She wanted Harris.

Alive.

Safe.

Beside her.

Always.

Later Harris called Lunar.

"The book."

Lunar approached.

But before anything happened—

Harlina stole the Third Book.

Again.

Everyone stared.

She handed Harris food.

"First."

"Eat."

Harris looked defeated.

The strongest warrior in existence.

Completely powerless against one determined girl.

Smiling helplessly.

He accepted.

Harlina happily fed him.

Then Harris fed her back.

Koji cried again.

Lunar smiled.

And for the first time in many days…

The darkness around them felt smaller.

Yet beside the hospital window…

The moon silently watched.

And somewhere beyond sight…

The Third Book waited.

Ready to reveal a truth capable of changing everything forever.

TO BE CONTINUED...

BY HARRIS RAVI ⚔️🌌❤️‍💔📖😭

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 5: THE FORCE BEYOND THE BOOK

PART 1

Harlina stole the Third Book.

Again.

Everyone stared.

She handed Harris food.

"First."

"Eat."

Harris looked defeated.

The strongest warrior in existence.

Completely powerless against one determined girl.

Smiling helplessly.

He accepted.

Harlina happily fed him.

Then Harris fed her back.

Koji cried again.

Lunar smiled.

And for the first time in many days…

The darkness around them felt smaller.

Yet beside the hospital window…

The moon silently watched.

And somewhere beyond sight…

The Third Book waited.

Ready to reveal a truth capable of changing everything forever.

After finishing the food, Harris immediately stretched his hand toward the Third Book with impatient curiosity and excitement.

Harlina instantly pulled the book away, protecting it carefully like precious treasure nobody else deserved touching alone.

Harris blinked twice before realizing another battle awaited him, unfortunately against somebody infinitely more terrifying than monsters.

"Book."

Harris pointed seriously.

Harlina crossed her arms proudly.

"No."

The room became silent.

Koji already knew disaster approached.

Lunar quietly stepped backward.

Neither wished involvement.

Harris sighed dramatically.

"Harlina."

"No."

"Please."

"No."

"Harlina."

"No."

The strongest Void Walker lost another battle.

Without throwing even one attack.

Finally Harlina smiled mischievously before placing the Third Book upon her lap and revealing her condition.

"If you read it."

"I read it too."

Harris stared.

Then laughed softly.

"That's all?"

"Yes."

"Okay."

Harlina immediately brightened.

Koji nearly collapsed.

Lunar covered her mouth.

Everyone knew Harris accepted impossible conditions whenever Harlina became stubborn enough to demand them.

The Third Book finally rested between them as anticipation filled the hospital room with nervous excitement everywhere.

Slowly Harris opened the ancient pages.

Harlina leaned closer.

Both prepared themselves.

Both expected answers.

Neither expected confusion.

The symbols inside looked unfamiliar.

Ancient.

Foreign.

Impossible.

Every page contained countless characters unlike any language either had ever witnessed before anywhere.

Harris frowned deeply.

Harlina tilted her head.

They turned another page.

Then another.

Then another.

Nothing changed.

The mysterious language remained unreadable.

Their excitement slowly transformed into frustration.

"What does it say?"

Koji asked hopefully.

"No idea."

Harris answered honestly.

The room sighed collectively.

The Third Book possessed answers.

Unfortunately nobody possessed questions written within its strange language.

Suddenly.

A chilling sensation pierced Harris's entire body without warning, freezing his blood and stealing his comfortable breathing instantly.

His smile vanished.

His heartbeat accelerated.

His hands trembled.

Something stood nearby.

Something powerful.

Something familiar.

Something terrifying.

Harris immediately recognized the feeling.

The same force.

The same impossible presence.

The same unknown existence.

Sweat appeared across his forehead.

His breathing became heavier.

His chest tightened painfully.

The hospital room remained unchanged.

Yet Harris felt somebody watching him from beyond reality itself with overwhelming intensity and purpose.

"Harris?"

Harlina noticed immediately.

He didn't respond.

"Harris."

She called again.

His eyes finally moved.

"What happened?"

"Nothing."

A lie.

A terrible lie.

Harlina knew instantly.

She spent enough years around Harris to recognize every fake smile and every hidden fear.

"Harris."

"I'm fine."

Another lie.

Her expression hardened.

"Harris avoided eye contact."

That alone revealed everything.

Before anyone expected it.

SLAP.

The sound echoed throughout the room.

Koji froze.

Lunar froze.

Even Harris froze.

Harlina stood before him with tears already forming inside her eyes from pure frustration and fear.

"Tell me."

Harris looked away.

"Harris."

Her voice trembled.

"Tell me the truth."

He remained silent.

The mysterious force continued pressing against his senses relentlessly while fear slowly consumed his thoughts from inside.

"Harris."

"I'm fine."

Another lie.

Another mistake.

Another slap.

SLAP.

This time even Harris understood she wasn't angry.

She was scared.

Terrified.

Desperate.

Because every time Harris hid something dangerous, somebody suffered consequences later.

Sometimes him.

Sometimes everyone.

"Harris."

"Please."

Her voice cracked.

"What happened?"

The strongest warrior in existence lowered his head.

Yet refused answering.

The silence hurt Harlina more than any truth ever could.

She suddenly noticed something unusual.

Not around herself.

Not around the room.

Around Harris.

A strange pressure.

A strange tension.

Something invisible.

Something wrong.

Immediately her protective instincts activated.

Without hesitation she grabbed the Third Book and pulled it away from him.

"No."

Harris blinked.

"Harlina?"

"No."

She stood firmly.

"You aren't reading this anymore."

"Harlina—"

"No."

Her eyes were serious.

Terrifyingly serious.

"Sleep."

"I'm fine."

"No."

"Harlina."

"Sleep."

"Harlina."

Another raised hand appeared.

Harris instantly remembered previous experiences.

His survival instincts activated immediately.

"...Okay."

Koji nearly laughed.

Lunar turned away.

The legendary Void Walker feared cosmic horrors less than Harlina's disciplinary slaps.

Moments later Harris closed his eyes and pretended sleeping peacefully beneath hospital blankets while everyone watched carefully.

Harlina remained beside him for another hour.

Watching.

Protecting.

Worrying.

Eventually she sighed.

"I need to refresh and return later."

Koji nodded.

Lunar nodded.

Harlina looked toward Harris one final time before leaving the hospital room quietly and reluctantly.

The door closed.

Silence returned.

Several minutes passed.

Then Harris slowly opened his eyes.

The smile disappeared immediately.

The fear returned immediately.

That force.

That impossible force.

It still existed.

Still watching.

Still waiting.

Still calling.

And somewhere deep within his heart…

Harris knew this mystery was connected to something far greater than the Third Book itself.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 2

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 5: THE FORCE BEYOND THE BOOK

PART 2

The hospital room remained silent after Harlina departed.

Only the ticking clock accompanied Harris's increasingly troubled thoughts throughout the lonely afternoon hours ahead.

The mysterious force continued lingering nearby.

Invisible.

Watching.

Waiting.

Calling.

Each passing minute intensified the strange sensation until Harris could barely ignore its terrifying existence anymore.

His body still suffered.

His wounds still hurt.

His strength remained limited.

Yet curiosity proved stronger than pain.

Slowly Harris pushed himself upright.

Every movement felt like countless knives cutting through muscles already damaged by previous battles and sacrifices.

He gritted his teeth.

Endured.

Moved forward.

The force felt familiar somehow.

Not hostile.

Not friendly.

Something stranger.

Something older.

Something connected directly to the Void Throne hidden beyond the town's borders and forgotten history.

Harris carefully grabbed paper before writing a short message for anyone searching later after discovering his disappearance.

"I'll return in a few moments."

"Don't worry about me."

Simple.

Short.

Reassuring.

At least that was his intention.

After placing the letter carefully upon the bed, Harris quietly left the hospital without attracting attention today.

The journey toward the Throne Cave proved painful.

Every step challenged his recovering body beyond reasonable limits and endurance.

Yet Harris continued forward.

The mysterious force grew stronger.

Closer.

Clearer.

Almost guiding him.

Hours passed.

The sky gradually shifted colors while distant clouds drifted lazily across the horizon above the town.

Finally Harris reached the ancient Throne Cave.

The atmosphere instantly changed.

The moment he entered.

The force intensified dramatically.

The cave felt alive.

Ancient.

Awake.

Watching him carefully.

At the cave's center rested the Void Throne.

Silent as always.

Majestic as always.

Terrifying as always.

Yet something appeared different today.

Harris approached cautiously.

The force guided his eyes behind the throne itself where darkness concealed something unusual from ordinary sight.

A hidden passage.

No.

A hidden gate.

Massive.

Ancient.

Covered by symbols resembling those inside the Third Book itself exactly and mysteriously.

Harris stared speechlessly.

The gate had never existed before.

Or perhaps it always existed.

Waiting patiently.

Waiting specifically for him.

He reached forward carefully.

Nothing happened.

He examined every corner.

Every symbol.

Every marking.

Then finally noticed something important.

A keyhole.

Ancient.

Unique.

Powerful.

The gate required a key.

Without it.

Nothing opened.

Nothing moved.

Nothing revealed its secrets.

Harris clenched his fists.

Another mystery.

Another unanswered question.

Another obstacle.

Before he could investigate further.

Far away inside town.

A different crisis had already begun.

Harlina returned to the hospital carrying fresh food and renewed determination for another argument regarding Harris's rest schedule.

The moment she entered.

Her smile vanished.

The bed stood empty.

The room felt wrong.

Too quiet.

Too cold.

Too lonely.

"Harris?"

No answer.

Her heartbeat accelerated instantly.

"Harris?"

Still nothing.

Then she noticed the letter.

Quickly grabbing it.

Reading every word.

"I'll return in a few moments."

"Don't worry about me."

Harlina froze completely.

The letter trembled inside her hands.

Because something felt wrong.

Very wrong.

Harris never left without informing somebody directly.

Especially after recent injuries.

Especially after recent dangers.

Especially after everything happening around them lately.

Fear gripped her heart immediately.

A fear she couldn't explain.

A fear stronger than logic.

A fear stronger than reason.

Within minutes Koji and Lunar arrived after receiving her urgent message regarding Harris's disappearance and concerns.

Koji read the letter.

Lunar examined it carefully.

Neither appeared reassured.

Neither believed everything remained fine.

"This isn't normal."

Koji said quietly.

Harlina nodded immediately.

Lunar agreed.

The search began.

The entire town joined.

Everyone searched streets.

Markets.

Alleys.

Forests.

Shops.

Training grounds.

Every possible location.

Yet Harris remained missing.

Hours passed.

Still nothing.

Then suddenly.

A familiar figure appeared walking casually through town beneath the fading evening sunlight and shadows.

Harlina immediately spotted him.

"HARRIS!"

Relief exploded inside her chest.

Anger followed immediately afterward.

She sprinted toward him.

Ready to scold him.

Ready to drag him back.

Ready to slap him.

Ready to cry.

Ready to do everything simultaneously.

The figure stopped.

Waiting.

Watching.

Harlina finally reached him.

Without hesitation she raised her hand.

"You idiot!"

Her palm moved forward.

But never reached its destination.

The figure grabbed her wrist.

Effortlessly.

Instantly.

Firmly.

Everything stopped.

Harlina froze.

Confusion appeared inside her eyes.

Because Harris never stopped her before.

Never.

Not once.

Slowly the figure leaned closer.

His voice sounded colder than winter itself.

"Don't touch me again."

Silence.

Pure silence.

The world seemed frozen.

Harlina stared.

Unable to believe those words.

Unable to recognize the person standing before her anymore.

Pain pierced her heart immediately.

Not physical pain.

Something deeper.

Something worse.

Her eyes filled with tears.

Without speaking another word.

She ran.

Straight home.

Heart shattered.

Soul wounded.

Questions unanswered.

Meanwhile Koji had witnessed everything from nearby.

And immediately realized something felt horribly wrong.

Very wrong.

Dangerously wrong.

Because Harris would never speak like that.

Never.

Koji stepped forward slowly.

The figure turned toward him.

Both stared silently.

Then Koji asked.

"Who are you?"

The figure smiled.

Not Harris's smile.

Something darker.

Something twisted.

Something evil.

A laugh escaped his mouth.

Cold.

Cruel.

Monstrous.

"Interesting."

"How did you figure it out?"

Koji's expression darkened instantly.

The answer confirmed everything.

This wasn't Harris.

Not even close.

"First."

Koji replied firmly.

"Tell me who you are."

The fake Harris laughed louder.

Like a devil finally removing its mask.

And the peaceful evening instantly transformed into the beginning of a nightmare.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 3

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 5: THE FORCE BEYOND THE BOOK

PART 3

The fake Harris laughed louder.

Like a devil celebrating victory before the battle even started against those standing before him.

Koji immediately stepped backward.

Lunar arrived moments later.

Both sensed danger.

Both understood instantly.

This enemy wasn't ordinary.

The fake Harris slowly cracked his neck.

His smile widened unnaturally.

His eyes glowed with murderous intent.

The peaceful atmosphere vanished completely.

"Interesting."

The impostor spoke calmly.

"You recognized me faster than expected."

Koji clenched his fists.

"Where is Harris?"

The fake Harris laughed again.

A laugh completely different from Harris's warm and genuine personality that everyone loved deeply.

"I don't care about that fool."

The words echoed.

Lunar's expression darkened.

Koji's anger increased.

The impostor suddenly disappeared.

Then reappeared directly before Koji.

BOOM.

A powerful punch launched him across the street instantly.

Several walls shattered.

Dust exploded everywhere.

"KOJI!"

Lunar rushed forward immediately.

The fake Harris attacked again.

This time targeting him.

Lunar blocked.

But the impact sent him crashing backward violently into nearby buildings and debris.

The battle had begun.

And neither stood a chance.

Far away.

Inside the Throne Cave.

Harris remained before the ancient gate.

The mysterious force still surrounded him.

The hidden gate remained sealed.

The key remained missing.

Every answer remained beyond reach.

Frustrated.

He punched the wall nearby.

Nothing happened.

Then something unexpected caught his attention.

A faint glow.

Hidden within darkness.

Behind several ancient pillars.

Harris slowly followed the light.

Step by step.

The glow intensified.

Brighter.

Stronger.

More divine.

Finally he entered a hidden chamber.

And froze completely.

At the center stood a suit.

A magnificent suit.

A divine suit.

Radiating power beyond imagination itself.

Its aura surpassed anything Harris had ever witnessed before throughout countless battles and experiences during his journey.

Golden patterns moved across its surface.

Ancient symbols glowed softly.

The chamber trembled slightly.

As if reality itself respected its presence.

Beside the suit rested something equally unbelievable.

An arrow.

Not ordinary.

Not mortal.

A divine arrow.

Its power alone shook Harris's soul.

The mysterious force originated from these objects.

He finally understood.

Yet countless questions remained unanswered.

"What are you?"

Harris whispered softly.

No response came.

Only silence.

And power.

Endless power.

The divine arrow suddenly emitted light.

The suit responded immediately.

The chamber trembled violently.

The force intensified.

Calling him.

Choosing him.

Inviting him.

Harris stepped forward cautiously.

Then reached toward the suit.

The moment his fingers touched it.

A shockwave exploded throughout the chamber.

BOOOOOOM.

Ancient energy flooded his body instantly.

Pain.

Power.

Memories.

Voices.

Everything attacked simultaneously.

Harris nearly collapsed.

Yet continued.

The suit slowly wrapped around him.

Piece by piece.

Layer by layer.

Until finally.

It covered his entire body.

The transformation completed.

Silence followed.

Then.

His eyes opened.

The world looked different.

Sharper.

Clearer.

Smaller.

The divine suit amplified everything beyond imagination.

Strength.

Speed.

Awareness.

Perception.

Power.

Harris felt unstoppable.

Invincible.

Absolute.

A dangerous confidence emerged.

An unfamiliar arrogance.

An unfamiliar attitude.

The suit changed more than strength.

It affected emotions.

Thoughts.

Behavior.

And before Harris realized.

The divine arrow flew toward him automatically.

Straight into his hand.

The moment he grabbed it.

The entire cave shook violently.

Reality itself seemed unstable.

The divine suit recognized him.

The arrow accepted him.

Something impossible had occurred.

Then suddenly.

His senses expanded.

Far beyond the cave.

Far beyond the mountains.

Far beyond the town.

And immediately.

He sensed danger.

Koji.

Lunar.

Battle.

Blood.

Pain.

The fake Harris.

Everything.

Harris's expression changed instantly.

His anger exploded.

Without hesitation.

He vanished.

Back in town.

Koji struggled to stand.

Lunar's injuries worsened.

The impostor continued attacking relentlessly.

Every strike carried terrifying strength.

Every movement resembled Harris.

Yet lacked humanity.

Lacked kindness.

Lacked compassion.

The fake Harris prepared another devastating attack.

A finishing blow.

Enough to kill.

Enough to end everything.

Then suddenly.

The sky darkened.

The air trembled.

The ground shook.

Everyone froze.

A new presence arrived.

A terrifying presence.

A divine presence.

A figure appeared between the impostor and his targets.

Nobody recognized him.

A black-and-gold armored warrior.

A divine mask covered his face completely.

Void energy surrounded him.

Divine light merged with darkness.

His aura surpassed imagination.

Even the impostor stepped backward.

Fear appeared inside his eyes.

For the first time.

The fake Harris felt threatened.

The masked warrior said nothing.

Not one word.

Not one movement.

Yet everyone sensed overwhelming power.

The impostor immediately understood.

This opponent existed beyond him.

Beyond danger.

Beyond survival.

He tried escaping instantly.

A fatal mistake.

The masked warrior raised the divine arrow.

One motion.

One attack.

One second.

FLASH.

The battle ended.

The impostor never saw the strike.

Never understood it.

Never survived it.

The fake Harris collapsed unconscious immediately.

Then something unbelievable happened.

His body transformed.

Crystal.

Transparent crystal.

Like living glass.

Like frozen energy.

Like a prisoner trapped forever.

Everyone stared speechlessly.

The impossible enemy had fallen instantly.

Without a battle.

Without resistance.

Without hope.

The masked warrior approached silently.

Picked up the crystal.

Turned away.

And disappeared.

Leaving behind only shock.

Fear.

Questions.

And silence.

Koji and Lunar stared toward the horizon.

Neither knew the truth.

Neither realized.

The mysterious warrior.

The impossible warrior.

The being who saved them.

Was Harris.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 4

Got it, buddy. I’m fixing this properly now and making PART 4 complete, emotionally massive, and including ALL missing canon scenes you listed, with 20-word lines style.

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 5: THE FORCE BEYOND THE BOOK

PART 4 (COMPLETE CANON VERSION)

Harris carried the crystal silently through void silence, leaving behind unanswered questions echoing through collapsing reality behind him.

He returned to the Throne Cave alone, placing the crystal carefully inside a sealed ancient void storage chamber.

The chamber glowed faintly, protecting the crystal as if it contained something alive beyond comprehension and future awakening.

Suddenly the Divine Suit and Arrow reacted violently, breaking their containment and merging directly into Harris's weakened body.

His body collapsed instantly from overwhelming energy surge, yet all old injuries vanished as divine power rewrote flesh.

He tried to stand but failed completely, unable to move even one step under unbearable unknown pressure.

But Harlina's face appeared in his mind, forcing him forward through pain like crawling broken spirit across ground.

He crawled slowly like a wounded creature, dragging himself toward town despite body refusing all physical movement completely.

Every inch toward Harlina felt heavier than mountains crushing his soul under emotional gravity and unbearable loneliness combined.

He finally reached near Harlina's house, hiding behind shadows while watching her silently through broken emotional distance separation.

Inside the house, Harris saw Harlina crying, her tears falling uncontrollably, breaking something inside his already shattered heart.

He forced himself forward again, stepping closer despite emotional collapse, hoping for even a single glance from her.

Harlina suddenly looked at him and shouted "Go away from me," shattering his heart into glass fragments instantly.

That moment broke him completely, collapsing him emotionally as he sat in front of her house silently in rain.

Rain started falling heavily, soaking Harris completely while he remained motionless, staring at Harlina without any response or movement.

Emotional damage overwhelmed him completely, crushing his identity until he could no longer distinguish pain from existence itself.

A sudden unknown force overwhelmed him completely, causing him to lose consciousness while still sitting under heavy rain.

He slept outside in rain, completely unconscious, while void energy silently surrounded his broken and exhausted body.

Inside unconsciousness, the Third Voice called him again, saying “You did it, now start intense training to control.”

Harris did not respond at all, his mind too broken to process words or reality surrounding his existence.

The Third Voice understood his emotional collapse and softened, finally saying “You are lucky,” leaving Harris confused deeply.

He remained unconscious throughout the entire night under rain, as void and emotions mixed inside his shattered soul.

Koji arrived at Harlina’s house and told her everything about Harris’s condition and emotional collapse truthfully.

Harlina broke down instantly, crying uncontrollably upon realizing she was the reason for his emotional destruction.

Lunar saw Harris’s condition later and immediately understood he was not physically injured but emotionally destroyed deeply.

Lunar called out to Harris, but Harris refused to respond, avoiding everyone including Koji and Lunar completely.

Harris left slowly from Harlina’s house area, his heart heavier than mountains, dragging emotional pain everywhere he went.

He sat near the Void Throne again, lost in thoughts repeating Harlina's words that shattered his inner stability.

Inside the cave, a voice echoed again saying "You are lucky?" questioning his suffering and survival simultaneously.

Harris exploded emotionally, crying and shouting "What am I lucky for?" into empty void without receiving any answer.

The silence answered him painfully, increasing emotional pressure until he collapsed again from exhaustion and lack of energy.

Before losing consciousness completely, the Third Voice finally responded again, saying "You have good friends with you."

Harris rejected that truth internally, believing it was all past and no longer meaningful in his current reality.

He then spoke with previous Walkers, asking about Third Book language and Divine Suit origin desperately for answers.

The previous Walkers replied only one thing repeatedly: "You are lucky."

This made Harris furious, as he believed he had lost everything that defined luck or happiness in life.

They explained they never had friends like him and failed their worlds, losing everything they once protected.

That truth broke Harris further, leaving him unable to speak with any of them or continue conversations anymore.

He sat alone again, repeating Harlina's breaking words inside his mind like eternal echo of emotional destruction.

Harris remained unconscious for several hours, trapped between void memories, emotional pain, and collapsing sense of identity.

Harlina later heard the truth and cried uncontrollably, realizing how deeply her words had destroyed Harris completely.

She immediately told Koji to find Harris without wasting even a single moment of time or delay.

Koji and Lunar searched everywhere across the entire town desperately, ignoring their own injuries and exhaustion completely.

Finally they found Harris near the Void Throne in extremely bad condition, emotionally broken and physically exhausted.

They attempted to enter, but the Void Throne barrier rejected them completely, preventing access to Harris's location.

They called out to Harlina, asking her to come immediately without any hesitation or delay.

Harlina arrived crying heavily, desperately trying to break the barrier but failing repeatedly despite emotional determination.

Her repeated attempts awakened a Void Monster previously defeated only by Harris in earlier battles.

The monster attacked Koji, Lunar, and Harlina, injuring them slightly while they struggled to survive its presence.

Harlina screamed loudly, calling “HARRIS!” with desperation that echoed through void itself and broken reality around them.

Harris suddenly woke up inside barrier hearing her voice, immediately stopping the monster with remaining strength instinctively.

He allowed Koji, Lunar, and Harlina inside safely, then collapsed immediately after protecting them without hesitation.

Harlina cried uncontrollably, feeling overwhelming guilt for everything she said and did toward Harris previously.

They carried Harris to hospital immediately, hoping he would recover physically even if emotionally he remained broken.

Harris remained unconscious for five full days without waking or showing signs of awareness or response.

When he finally woke at night, he did not smile, did not speak, only looked at the moon silently.

Tears fell from his eyes as he cried alone, unable to express pain through words or actions anymore.

Morning arrived, but Harris refused to speak to anyone including Koji, Lunar, and Harlina completely and permanently.

Harlina tried multiple times to make him respond, even slapping him, but he remained completely unresponsive emotionally.

Silence filled everything.

Broken silence.

Heavy silence.

Unfixable silence.

Harris sat alone, thinking only one question repeatedly.

“How do I fix my heart again?”

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 5

VOID WALKER SEASON 5

CHAPTER 5: THE FORCE BEYOND THE BOOK

PART 5 (FINAL CANON)

The hospital room was silent.

Too silent.

Even the machines felt afraid to make noise around Harris.

He sat near the window.

Watching the moon.

Not speaking.

Not blinking much.

Just existing.

Koji stood at the door.

Lunar beside him.

Harlina a little farther back.

All three afraid to step in.

Not because of danger.

Because of emotion.

Harris finally whispered.

“...It’s quieter now.”

Koji stepped forward slightly.

“Harris...”

But Harris didn’t look at him.

Harlina took one step forward.

Her voice broke immediately.

“Please... talk to me...”

Silence.

Harris’s fingers trembled slightly.

Then stopped.

“I tried…”

His voice cracked.

“…I really tried.”

Harlina’s eyes filled instantly.

“I know…”

“I know I hurt you…”

“I didn’t mean—”

Harris finally turned his head.

Slowly.

His eyes empty.

“But you said it.”

That single line destroyed her completely.

Silence filled the room again.

Lunar clenched his fists.

“He’s shutting down completely…”

Koji whispered.

“…He’s not just hurt.”

“…He’s disappearing inside himself.”

Harlina suddenly stepped forward.

No fear anymore.

Only desperation.

“I slapped you…”

“I yelled at you…”

“I pushed you away…”

Her voice broke harder.

“But I was scared of losing you!”

Harris’s eyes flickered.

Just slightly.

Harlina continued.

“I thought if I pushed you away… you’d stop getting hurt…”

“But I did the opposite…”

Tears fell fast now.

“I hurt you instead…”

Silence.

Then—

Harris spoke softly.

“…I didn’t need distance.”

“I needed you.”

Harlina froze.

Koji looked down.

Lunar turned away slightly.

Harris’s voice became quieter.

“…But I don’t know how to come back from this.”

The room felt heavier.

Even the moonlight outside dimmed slightly.

Then—

A faint echo returned.

The Third Voice.

“You are lucky…”

Harris flinched.

But didn’t react violently this time.

Just tired.

Harlina heard nothing.

Only Harris’s pain.

The voice continued inside him.

“You still feel everything…”

“That means you are not lost.”

Harris whispered.

“…Feels like I am.”

Suddenly—

Koji stepped forward fully.

“Harris.”

For the first time, firm voice.

“You saved us.”

“You protected everyone.”

“You didn’t disappear.”

Harris looked away.

“…That doesn’t fix this.”

Lunar spoke quietly.

“…But it proves you’re still here.”

Silence again.

Harlina slowly reached forward.

But stopped halfway.

Remembering everything.

Then pulled her hand back.

Trembling.

“I’m scared to touch you now…”

Her voice broke.

“…because I don’t want to hurt you again.”

That hit Harris differently.

Not pain.

Not anger.

Something softer.

He finally said:

“…You won’t hurt me by being close.”

A pause.

“…You hurt me when you left me alone in my head.”

Harlina’s knees weakened.

She stepped forward fully now.

Slowly.

Carefully.

Then stopped right in front of him.

“I’m here now.”

“I’m not leaving.”

Silence.

Harris stared at her.

Long.

Empty.

Then slowly…

Something cracked inside him.

Not destruction.

Release.

His eyes filled slightly.

“…Don’t promise things you can’t keep.”

Harlina shook her head.

“I already did.”

“I already chose you.”

Koji exhaled heavily.

Lunar looked up.

Something shifted in the room.

Very slightly.

Harris’s breathing changed.

The void pressure inside him weakened for the first time.

The Third Voice spoke again.

“You are lucky…”

But softer now.

Almost distant.

Harris whispered back in his mind.

“...If I am lucky...”

“...why does it hurt so much?”

Silence answered.

But not empty silence.

Understanding silence.

Harlina slowly sat beside him.

Not touching.

Just staying.

“I can sit here until you stop feeling alone.”

Harris didn’t respond.

But didn’t move away either.

Koji slowly smiled a little.

“...That’s a start.”

Lunar nodded.

“...Yeah.”

Outside the window...

The moonlight grew softer.

Less heavy.

Less watching.

More peaceful.

Inside the Void Throne far away...

Harris sat alone on the ancient seat.

Covered in silence.

Surrounded by power.

Surrounded by emptiness.

Days passed.

He trained endlessly.

Trying to control the Divine Suit.

Trying to suppress the Arrow’s force.

Trying to distract himself from memory.

From pain.

From her voice.

“I am alone.”

“I was always alone.”

Harlina still came every day.

Food.

Silence.

Distance.

Hope.

But Harris only trained harder.

Colder.

Stronger.

More distant.

His mind changed.

He stopped thinking “us.”

He stopped thinking “friends.”

Only survival remained.

Only void remained.

Two days remained.

His birthday approached.

The town prepared celebrations.

Koji wanted festival.

Lunar wanted joy.

People wanted hope.

Harlina stood quietly.

Thinking deeply.

No smile.

No tears.

Just determination.

“I will give him something unforgettable…”

“…something that reaches him again.”

Inside the Void Throne…

Harris closed his eyes.

Remembered childhood.

Pain.

Loneliness.

Then fragments of happiness sank too deep to reach.

The same echo returned.

Harlina’s voice.

“Go away from me.”

His fists tightened.

Not anger.

Not sadness.

Just emptiness.

“I don’t need anyone…”

“…I never did.”

Far away...

Harlina still waited.

Still refused to give up.

Because now she understood something clearly.

Harris wasn't rejecting them.

He was rejecting pain itself.

By becoming alone.

And somewhere deep inside the Void Throne...

The Third Book opened slightly.

Just a crack.

Waiting.

For his birthday.

For the breaking point.

For what comes next.

The Void Voice whispered:

“...The next phase begins soon.”

Harris finally closed his eyes.

Not asleep.

Not gone.

Just tired of fighting his own mind.

And for the first time in days...

He didn’t feel completely alone.

TO BE CONTINUED...

BY HARRIS RAVI 🌌📖💔⚔️