
WHITE
OMEGA CRYSTAL
POWER: ABILITY COPY
CRIMSON
OMEGA CRYSTAL
POWER:
SILENT EXECUTION
PURPLE
OMEGA CRYSTAL
POWER:
TWIN ASSASSIN CONTROL
VIOLET
OMEGA CRYSTAL
POWER:
TWIN ASSASSIN EVOLUTION
BLUE
OMEGA CRYSTAL
POWER:
MIND CONTROL & FALSE REALITY
THEY FORGOT HIM...
THEY REJECTED HIM...
HE WAS ALONE...
BROKEN...
FORGOTTEN...
BUT HE NEVER FORGOT THEM.
THEY REMEMBERED...
THEY CRIED...
THEY CAME BACK...
THEY FORGAVE HIM.
VOID WALKER
SEASON 6
THE WORLD THAT FORGOT HIM
FIVE CRYSTALS FOUND.
FIVE NIGHTMARES
SURVIVED.
FIVE MORE AWAIT BEYOND THE SECRET GATE.
5 / 10 OMEGA CRYSTALS COLLECTED
WHITE
CRIMSON
PURPLE
VIOLET
BLUE
BLACK
GREEN YELLOW
ORANGE
SILVER REMAIN
BY HARRIS RAVI

VOID WALKER SEASON6

SEASON 6 CHAPTER 1 — VOID THRONE: BREAKDOWN OF THE WALKER

Harris sat upon the Void Throne, but the name “throne” no longer matched what it felt like. It was not authority. It was not power. It was not even comfort. It was a place where silence gathered itself into weight, pressing against his mind until even thoughts felt tired of existing.

The Void around him did not feel empty anymore.

It felt aware.

Not alive in a physical sense—but present, like it was listening to every memory he refused to speak out loud. Every moment he had buried, every emotion he had ignored, every heartbreak he had convinced himself he had already survived… all of it returned here, without mercy.

Harris didn’t move for a long time.

Not because he was peaceful.

But because movement itself felt unnecessary when everything inside him was already collapsing at once.

His eyes stayed open, staring into nothing that reflected everything.

The past came first.

Not as images—but as pressure.

Moments where he smiled when he didn’t feel okay. Moments where someone left and he didn’t stop them. Moments where power awakened too fast for his emotions to catch up. Moments where he chose strength over rest because weakness felt like betrayal.

All of it repeated.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Until silence itself felt like a sound screaming inside his skull.

He finally closed his eyes.

And sleep came like a fall, not a rest.

He was standing in a dark space.

Not a place.

A state.

A void without edges.

And in it, he saw himself.

Not one version.

Many.

A version of him sitting alone, not speaking.

A version laughing without joy.

A version bleeding but still fighting.

A version holding his chest like something inside had cracked too deep to repair.

And in the center—

A version that didn’t move at all.

Just stared back.

As if waiting.

As if judging.

Harris tried to speak.

But no sound came.

The versions didn’t speak either.

They only watched.

And slowly, they began to disappear one by one.

Not dying.

Not fading.

Just being erased.

And he felt something inside him twist violently.

“No…” he tried to say.

But the word never left.

He woke up gasping.

Cold sweat clung to his skin like he had been drowning without water. His chest rose and fell unevenly, each breath heavier than the last. For a moment, he didn’t understand where he was.

Then reality returned.

Void Throne.

Silence.

Himself.

Thirty minutes of sleep.

That was all.

Not rest.

Just interruption.

Harris slowly lowered his head.

His fingers trembled slightly.

“...Still here...” he whispered, not relieved, not angry—just acknowledging survival like it was an unwanted fact.

He stood up.

Not gently.

Not slowly.

Like his body had been ordered rather than chosen.

And he walked.

The training ground was already waiting for him like it always did.

It never judged him.

It never stopped him.

It simply existed.

And that was dangerous.

Because existence without resistance becomes invitation.

He stepped into it.

And something inside him shifted.

The moment his feet touched the ground, his body remembered what it had been conditioned to do when silence became unbearable.

Train.

Not for strength.

Not for growth.

But for escape.

He began with controlled movements.

Slow strikes.

Measured steps.

Breathing aligned with motion.

For a few minutes, it looked like discipline.

Like control.

Like he was still inside himself.

But then—

Something broke.

Not physically.

Emotionally.

A memory surfaced mid-motion.

And his strike became sharper.

Faster.

Harder.

The air cracked slightly.

He didn’t stop.

Another memory followed.

His movement changed again.

More violent.

Less structured.

More desperate.

His body was no longer following technique.

It was following pain.

Pain that had no language.

Pain that only knew movement.

Minutes became hours.

His breathing deepened into exhaustion.

Sweat dripped from his face, but he didn’t wipe it.

His muscles burned, but he ignored it.

His mind kept repeating one thought like a broken command:

If I stop… I will feel everything.

So he didn’t stop.

He couldn’t.

By midday, his body began to lose coordination.

His steps became uneven.

His balance weakened.

But still—

He continued.

Each strike now looked less like training and more like resistance against collapse itself. The Void energy around him flickered unpredictably, reacting not to his will but to his emotional instability.

The air around him felt heavier.

Dense.

Like reality itself was slowing down to watch him break.

Koji arrived first.

He didn't interrupt immediately.

He watched.

Because what he saw was not just training.

It was erosion.

Harris was not building strength.

He was burning structure.

Koji finally spoke.

"Harris… stop."

No response.

Koji stepped closer.

“You’re not improving. You’re destroying yourself.”

Still nothing.

Harris’s eyes stayed forward.

Red.

Empty.

Focused on something no one else could see.

Koji clenched his fists.

“This isn’t discipline anymore. This is punishment.”

Still no reaction.

Koji’s voice rose.

“You think this is how you control the suit?! You’re going to lose your body before you gain control!”

Silence.

Only movement.

Only repetition.

Koji looked back in frustration.

“Lunar—do something.”

Lunar arrived moments later.

He didn’t speak first.

He observed.

Measured.

Analyzed.

Then his expression changed slightly.

Not fear.

Not surprise.

Understanding.

“This is not physical overexertion,” Lunar said quietly. “This is emotional feedback looping through the Void system.”

Koji turned.

“What does that even mean?!”

Lunar didn’t look away from Harris.

“It means the Void is learning from his emotional state.”

A pause.

“And right now… his emotional state is collapse.”

Koji went silent.

Because that sounded less like science.

And more like evolution.

Harlina arrived last.

She stopped the moment she saw him.

Not because of distance.

But because recognition hit too hard at once.

Harris was still standing.

But barely.

His body was trembling slightly.

His aura was unstable—fluctuating between pressure and silence.

His eyes were red.

Not anger-red.

Not battle-red.

Exhaustion-red.

The kind that forms when sleep becomes optional and pain becomes constant.

“…Harris…” she said softly.

Her voice reached him.

For half a second.

His movement slowed.

Just slightly.

Then resumed.

Harder.

Faster.

As if hearing her voice increased the weight inside him instead of relieving it.

Koji stepped forward sharply.

“LOOK AT HER.”

The words cut through the air like a blade.

Silence followed instantly.

Harris stopped.

Not fully relaxed.

Not calm.

Just frozen mid-motion.

His breathing was uneven.

His shoulders trembled.

Something inside him was fighting something else.

Then—

He collapsed.

No warning.

No dramatic final strike.

Just failure.

His knees hit the ground first.

Then his hands.

Then his entire body gave out like something inside him finally disconnected.

Dust rose around him slowly.

The world did not move.

No one spoke.

Even Koji froze.

Even Lunar stopped analyzing.

Even Harlina could not step forward.

Harris lay there, staring at the ground like it was unfamiliar.

Like he didn’t recognize where he ended and where the world began anymore.

And then—

It happened.

A tear fell.

Silent.

Followed by another.

Not loud.

Not visible to the world in any dramatic sense.

Just real.

Heavy.

Uncontrolled.

Not weakness.

Not defeat.

But overflow.

The kind that happens when containment no longer works.

His fingers curled into the ground slightly, as if trying to anchor himself to something that wouldn't disappear.

And then—

The voice returned.

Inside him.

Calm.

Deep.

Unmoving.

"Leave ego… just for a moment."

"Think with patience… not destruction."

Harris did not respond.

Not because he disagreed.

But because response itself felt impossible.

His silence wasn’t resistance.

It was exhaustion beyond thought.

The voice faded.

And for a brief moment—

Everything was still.

Then—

Cold water splashed onto his face.

His body jolted instantly.

He gasped sharply, eyes snapping open as he tried to sit up.

Confusion hit first.

Then alertness.

Then fear.

He looked around quickly.

Left.

Right.

Behind.

Above.

Nothing.

No one.

No movement.

No presence.

Only silence.

“...Who did this...” he whispered.

No answer came.

Only wind moving through the training ground.

Soft.

Unbothered.

As if nothing important had just happened.

And somewhere deep inside Harris—

The Void Throne did not feel empty anymore.

It felt like it was waiting for the next version of him to rise.

SEASON 6 CHAPTER 2 — THE NIGHT BEFORE THE BIRTHDAY

The night before his birthday arrived like a silent pressure rather than a celebration.

There was no excitement in Harris anymore.

Only repetition.

Only training.

Only emptiness shaped into motion.

Day by day, the heartbreak inside him didn’t fade—it evolved. It stopped being sharp pain and became something heavier, like a constant weight pressing against his existence. It didn’t hurt in moments anymore.

It hurt always.

Slowly, Harris stopped feeling like a boy who was training.

He started feeling like a war machine that had forgotten why it was built.

His movements became precise, emotionless, automatic. Every strike, every step, every breath was controlled—not by peace, but by survival. Even his thoughts began to slow down, as if emotions were too expensive to process.

Then something changed.

He finally learned to fly.

At first, it was unstable. His body resisted it, his energy flickered, but eventually he rose into the sky like something breaking free from gravity itself.

For a moment—

There was silence.

Not inside him.

But around him.

He reached the highest point above the world he knew, and for the first time in days, he saw everything from above instead of inside it. The wind moved around him gently, and for a brief second, something almost like relief touched him.

The world looked smaller.

His pain looked distant.

And yet—

That was the moment his mind shifted.

Because up there, in that quiet altitude, one thought returned.

Harlina.

Her words.

The ones he couldn’t forget.

Why did she say that…?

The question wasn’t loud.

But it was permanent.

And then—

His energy flickered.

The flight collapsed instantly.

His body lost control.

Gravity took him back without mercy.

He fell.

Fast.

Breaking through air like a falling star with no direction.

The world blurred around him until impact came violently.

He hit the fountain.

Water exploded upward on contact.

Stone cracked beneath the force.

And Harris went still.

Unconscious.

Darkness again.

But this time, it was not empty.

It had a voice.

The third voice returned.

Calm.

Almost amused.

“You keep thinking about her words…”

Harris’s mind responded without a body.

“…Why did she say that to me?”

A pause.

Then the voice laughed softly.

“Then ask her.”

Harris stayed silent.

His emotions tightened immediately.

“No,” he said internally. “I can’t.”

“Why?”

“My mind won’t let me.”

The voice faded into quiet amusement again, like it already understood him better than he did.

Morning came slowly.

Harris woke near the fountain.

Cold air.

Wet clothes.

Heavy silence.

He didn’t move immediately.

Just stared upward.

Something inside him was still stuck in the same thought from the night before.

Harlina’s words.

Koji arrived later, expecting chaos, expecting training, expecting destruction.

But Harris didn’t even look at him.

Koji sighed.

“Still training?”

Harris nodded once.

And continued.

Hours passed again.

The cycle restarted.

But something was different now.

Not his body.

His mind.

It kept circling one question.

Why did she say those words?

Koji noticed it.

After a while, he stepped forward.

“You’ve been like this for weeks.”

Harris didn’t respond.

Koji frowned.

“...Did something happen with Harlina?”

That question finally made Harris stop.

His movement froze.

Koji blinked.

“...Wait. Did she say something to you?”

Silence.

Then Harris spoke quietly.

“Why did Harlina say those words to me?”

Koji was stunned.

“I... don’t know.”

A pause.

Then Koji added carefully.

“But you should ask her directly.”

Harris immediately shook his head.

“No.”

Koji frowned.

“Why not?”

“My mind won’t allow it.”

Koji stared at him for a long moment, then exhaled.

“…I’ll tell her then. And everyone else.”

Harris nodded slightly.

Then, after a pause, almost unfamiliar:

“Happy.”

Koji froze instantly.

“…Happy?”

Harris looked at him.

“What is happy?”

That single question hit harder than any attack.

Koji didn’t move.

Didn’t speak.

Just stood there, completely frozen.

Then he slowly called everyone.

Harlina arrived first.

The moment she saw Harris, she already understood something was wrong deeper than usual.

Koji explained everything.

Every word Harris had said.

Every question.

Every silence.

Harlina’s eyes widened slightly.

Then she broke.

Tears came instantly.

Not from fear.

But from guilt.

She tried to speak, but her voice cracked before forming words.

Koji watched quietly, understanding something important:

This wasn’t just emotional confusion.

This could change Harris completely.

Evening arrived.

Harris collapsed again after hours of exhausting training.

His body hit the ground near the fountain.

He didn’t move.

Didn’t speak.

Just stared at nothing.

The same question looping inside him again and again.

Koji brought food.

“Harris. Eat.”

“No.”

Koji sighed.

“You haven’t recovered.”

“I don’t need recovery.”

Koji paused… then slowly left him alone.

Because forcing him wouldn’t work anymore.

Not this time.

Later.

Harlina arrived again.

But this time, she carried something.

Food.

Cake.

Memories.

She stepped closer slowly.

“Harris…”

No response.

She moved beside him near the fountain.

“Do you remember… when we first met?”

That question finally made something shift.

Harris turned slightly.

Slowly.

Like reality itself was catching up to him.

Harlina gently pulled out a photo.

It showed a memory.

A cake.

A birthday.

A moment where things were simpler.

A moment where he smiled.

For a second—

His expression cracked.

Not fully.

But enough.

Something inside him broke open quietly.

“...Why did you say those words to me?” he asked again.

Harlina’s eyes trembled.

And then she explained.

Everything.

Not loudly.

Not dramatically.

But honestly.

Each word carried weight.

Each sentence carried truth.

Harris listened.

Completely still.

When she finished, silence returned.

But this silence was different.

Less heavy.

More human.

“I understand…” he finally said.

Then he added softly:

“...Sorry.”

And he slowly turned away.

As if leaving.

But before he could step forward—

Harlina suddenly hugged him.

Tightly.

Completely.

“No,” she said.

“Don’t leave me alone like this. Please. Stay. Talk to me.”

That was it.

Something inside Harris shattered.

Not pain.

Not confusion.

But containment.

He finally broke.

Tears came fully this time.

Not silent.

Not controlled.

Real.

He hugged her back tightly.

And for the first time in a long time—

He wasn’t alone inside himself.

Harlina leaned closer.

And kissed him softly.

Harris froze instantly.

His entire body stopped functioning for a second.

His face turned completely red.

His mind short-circuited between confusion, embarrassment, and emotion overload.

“...What...” he whispered internally.

And then—

He collapsed unconscious.

Darkness again.

But this time, different.

Peaceful.

A faint voice echoed.

“...Thank you...”

Harlina sat beside him.

Koji watched quietly.

Lunar observed in silence.

Then Harris woke up slowly.

Harlina was still there.

She fed him food gently.

Cake.

Water.

Care.

And for the first time in weeks—

He ate properly.

Not like survival.

Like living.

Night came gently.

Harlina brought him back home.

He didn’t resist.

Didn’t question.

Just followed.

And that night—

He slept.

Deeply.

Holding her hand tightly.

Like if he let go...

he would lose everything again.

Morning arrived.

Harlina woke first.

She made coffee.

She watched him sleep peacefully.

For the first time—

No Void pressure.

No training madness.

Just silence.

Human silence.

Harris slowly woke up.

Looked at her.

And smiled slightly.

“...Coffee?”

She nodded.

They went to the terrace.

Sunlight touched everything softly.

Harlina called him.

“Breakfast.”

He nodded.

“...Okay. I’m coming.”

They fed each other quietly.

No war.

No Void.

No destruction.

Just two broken people learning how to exist again.

TO BE CONTINUED...

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 CHAPTER 3

THE MASK NO ONE RECOGNIZED

The peaceful days returned slowly, carrying warmth, laughter, healing memories, and fragile happiness back into Harris's recovering heart again.

Harris remembered more forgotten moments daily, rebuilding broken memories carefully while protecting everyone precious from future darkness ahead.

Several peaceful days passed quietly before Harris returned training relentlessly, determined strengthening himself against approaching unknown threats everywhere.

Morning sunlight covered training grounds while Harris practiced endlessly, refusing breaks despite exhaustion, pain, and lingering injuries remaining.

Harlina arrived carrying water, food, blankets, medicine, and enough supplies seemingly prepared for an entire expedition alone.

Harris immediately protested loudly, claiming excessive care weakened warriors, while Harlina calmly prepared another lecture about responsibility.

The argument lasted nearly thirty minutes before Harlina delivered one perfectly aimed slap ending every remaining discussion instantly.

Harris accepted defeat immediately afterward, rubbing his cheek carefully while admitting survival required obeying terrifying women sometimes.

Harlina crossed her arms proudly while Koji laughed uncontrollably nearby and Lunar nearly collapsed watching the scene unfold.

Despite embarrassment Harris smiled genuinely because these ordinary moments represented everything he once feared losing forever completely.

Later Harris traveled toward the ancient Throne Cave seeking answers regarding the mysterious locked gate awaiting beyond.

Standing before the massive structure, Harris focused intensely while placing both hands against its ancient surface.

Void energy flowed outward continuously, yet the gate remained unmoved, silent, and completely unaffected by efforts.

The cave echoed strangely afterward, almost resembling distant laughter hidden behind countless forgotten dimensions beyond reality.

Harris narrowed his eyes carefully before sensing something horrifying emerging rapidly from beyond the nearby town.

The atmosphere changed immediately afterward as birds fled desperately while the skies darkened without natural explanation suddenly.

A gigantic Void Portal opened violently above the town, shaking streets, buildings, mountains, and frightened citizens everywhere.

Two colossal monsters emerged slowly from darkness, their bodies larger than towers and covered by corruption.

Their roars shattered windows instantly while countless civilians escaped desperately through streets consumed by widespread panic.

Without hesitation Harris rushed forward immediately, placing himself directly between monsters and defenseless citizens below there.

The battle started brutally as Harris launched powerful attacks repeatedly against both enormous creatures simultaneously alone.

Shockingly his strikes barely affected them, while their counterattacks inflicted severe injuries across his recovering body.

Blood stained his clothes rapidly while pain spread relentlessly through muscles already weakened from previous battles.

Knowing circumstances worsened rapidly, Harris attempted activating the Divine Suit protecting him throughout countless dangerous wars.

Nothing happened.

The suit refused appearing.

For the first time during years of battles, absolute uncertainty entered Harris's determined heart unexpectedly there.

The monsters continued destroying buildings mercilessly while fires spread throughout neighborhoods and terrified families escaped desperately.

Realizing immediate action remained necessary, Harris retrieved a mysterious mask and concealed his identity completely instead.

The masked fighter charged forward again, refusing surrender despite lacking powers usually defining his legendary reputation.

Citizens watched silently while wondering who possessed courage confronting impossible destruction despite overwhelming disadvantages present today.

Each attack launched by monsters threw Harris across streets repeatedly, leaving additional injuries throughout his body.

Still he stood again.

And again.

And again.

Nobody recognized him.

Not Koji.

Not Lunar.

Not Harlina.

Not even the people closest to his heart recognized the warrior risking everything for their safety.

The monsters advanced relentlessly while devastation expanded further, leaving nearly half the town completely destroyed already.

Suddenly one monster targeted Harlina and Koji directly while another prepared eliminating nearby civilians simultaneously nearby.

Harris witnessed everything happening.

His heart froze completely.

Without thinking he unleashed every remaining ounce of strength hidden within his exhausted injured body immediately.

He intercepted both attacks personally, receiving devastating damage while protecting everyone standing behind him successfully there.

The impact shattered surrounding ground violently while blood flowed continuously from countless wounds covering his body.

Knowing victory remained impossible nearby, Harris lifted Harlina and Koji carefully before flying away rapidly.

During that desperate escape moment, overwhelming relief consumed Harris seeing Harlina alive and completely unharmed afterward.

Acting instinctively, he hugged her tightly.

Harlina immediately misunderstood everything.

Believing him a stranger, she delivered an absolutely devastating slap across his face instantly afterward there.

The sound echoed dramatically.

Harris nearly forgot monsters existed.

Even Koji looked impressed.

Harris released her immediately afterward while realizing nobody could recognize him behind this mysterious disguise anymore.

A strange idea formed quietly.

Perhaps this mask could become useful.

Perhaps he could train secretly without everyone worrying constantly about dangerous battles around him anymore.

Returning toward destruction, Harris confronted both monsters once more despite worsening injuries reducing available strength considerably.

He analyzed their movements carefully before developing one final strategy capable ending everything permanently today.

Gathering every remaining fragment of power, Harris launched himself skyward carrying both enormous creatures simultaneously upward.

The monsters struggled violently.

Clouds exploded apart.

The atmosphere trembled.

Harris screamed while forcing them higher.

Higher.

Higher.

Until the town became invisible beneath distant clouds surrounding the battlefield above the world completely there.

Then Harris summoned the Eternal Arrow.

Golden light illuminated heaven itself.

The monsters sensed fear.

For the first time.

The Eternal Arrow pierced both creatures simultaneously before detonating across skies like divine judgment descending suddenly.

Two explosions shook horizons.

Then silence remained.

The monsters vanished forever.

Victorious but exhausted, Harris immediately returned secretly toward Throne Cave before anyone discovered his identity.

Inside the cave he collapsed intentionally and pretended remaining unconscious while waiting for rescue there patiently.

Meanwhile Harlina searched desperately throughout damaged town, ignoring injuries while repeatedly calling Harris's name everywhere.

Fear consumed her thoughts.

She searched every street.

Every alley.

Every shelter.

Every destroyed building.

But Harris remained missing.

Tears formed continuously.

Finally she discovered him inside the cave lying motionless against cold stone surfaces beneath shadows.

Her heart nearly stopped.

Dropping beside him immediately, Harlina lifted Harris carefully into her trembling arms while crying uncontrollably there.

Water splashed gently across his face.

Several moments passed silently.

Then Harris opened his eyes.

Confusion appeared perfectly.

"What happened?" he asked innocently.

Harlina immediately explained every terrifying event including monsters, destruction, mysterious masked fighter, and widespread panic.

While listening carefully, Harris noticed her eyes remained red from prolonged crying throughout terrifying hours.

For a moment guilt pierced deeply.

Then Harlina noticed something unusual.

His cheeks appeared bright red.

Not embarrassment.

Pain.

She narrowed her eyes suspiciously.

"Harris, how did your cheeks become like that?" she asked carefully while examining him closer.

Harris answered instantly.

"I hit a rock and fell down."

The lie emerged with terrifying confidence.

Harlina believed everything.

Harris silently celebrated surviving another dangerous investigation from her suspicious observations without consequences afterward somehow.

That night reconstruction efforts remained unfinished while countless families searched desperately for temporary shelter arrangements.

After everyone slept peacefully, Harris quietly awakened and left unnoticed beneath moonlit skies surrounding town.

Using immense power carefully, he rebuilt damaged roads, buildings, homes, and infrastructure throughout entire town overnight.

By sunrise everything appeared restored.

People awoke shocked.

Rumors spread instantly.

Nobody understood how reconstruction happened.

Everyone discussed miracles.

Koji approached Harris afterward carrying recorded footage from battle showing masked fighter confronting monsters courageously.

"Could you sense his energy?" Koji asked seriously while studying every detail repeatedly throughout investigation efforts.

Harris remained calm.

"No. I was unconscious during battle."

Koji accepted explanation reluctantly.

Investigation continued.

The mystery deepened further.

Nobody suspected Harris.

Later Harris prepared leaving for training again.

Unfortunately Harlina appeared carrying enough food and water supplying several armies comfortably for months.

Another argument started immediately.

Another slap followed immediately afterward.

Harris surrendered immediately afterward.

Fear remained powerful motivation.

Together they traveled toward training grounds beneath clear skies filled with peaceful afternoon sunlight everywhere around.

During practice Harris suddenly sensed unfamiliar force emerging directly from within his own body unexpectedly today.

The Divine Suit appeared automatically.

Dark energy covered him instantly.

His expression changed completely.

Even his voice sounded different.

Harlina stepped backward nervously.

"HARRIS!" she shouted loudly.

The transformed Harris smiled casually.

"Why are you shouting like this, pretty girl?" he asked playfully while observing her surprised reaction there.

Harlina froze completely.

Her brain stopped functioning.

Several seconds passed.

Then another slap arrived.

A powerful one.

The suit disappeared instantly afterward.

Pain exploded across Harris's face.

"Why did you slap me?" he asked desperately.

Harlina stared speechlessly.

"You called me pretty girl."

Harris blinked repeatedly.

"What?"

He remembered nothing.

Five minutes vanished again.

The missing memories returned.

The mystery worsened.

Harlina immediately slapped him once more.

"Were are you going mentally?" she demanded angrily.

Harris touched both injured cheeks carefully.

"No were."

The answer satisfied nobody.

Even nearby birds seemed disappointed.

Training continued afterward despite confusion surrounding strange memory gaps becoming increasingly frequent recently lately.

Evening arrived peacefully.

Together they boarded a train returning home while citizens discussed recent extraordinary events continuously nearby.

Every conversation mentioned masked fighter.

Every conversation mentioned monsters.

Every conversation mentioned miraculous overnight reconstruction efforts completed somehow mysteriously without explanation.

Harlina listened carefully before turning toward Harris suddenly while remembering important detail unexpectedly during journey.

"The masked man tried hugging me."

Harris nearly choked immediately.

Pretending outrage, he asked dramatically.

"Then what did you do?"

Harlina smiled proudly.

"I slapped him strongly."

Harris remembered everything instantly.

His cheek hurt emotionally.

And physically.

"That was right," Harris replied carefully.

He smiled nervously afterward.

Another slap landed immediately.

"Harris! Are you listening?"

"Just thinking," he answered rapidly.

Finally they reached home together before entering kitchen and preparing dinner side by side peacefully afterward.

The atmosphere felt warm.

Comfortable.

Safe.

Exactly the kind of ordinary happiness Harris fought protecting every single day continuously throughout hardships.

After refreshing himself, Harris joined Harlina for dinner beneath comforting lights illuminating their peaceful evening.

They fed each other gently.

Neither spoke much.

Neither needed words.

Their smiles communicated everything.

Later Harris prepared sleeping quietly.

Then Harlina stopped him suddenly.

"Can we go on a trip alone?" she asked softly while avoiding eye contact completely there.

Harris immediately became nervous.

His heartbeat accelerated.

His face reddened.

"Later. Not now."

Disappointment appeared immediately across her expression.

The sadness hurt more than any battle wound Harris experienced recently throughout difficult struggles altogether.

Seeing her reaction, Harris stepped closer and embraced her tightly while speaking honestly afterward there.

"My heart isn't ready for that emotion yet."

Harlina's eyes widened.

Then happiness returned.

Pure happiness.

She hugged him back gently.

"Okay, Harris."

Several moments passed peacefully.

Then she whispered another question.

"Can we sleep together tonight?"

Harris malfunctioned internally.

His face turned completely red.

His voice cracked instantly.

"Why not?"

Harlina smiled brightly.

Then Harris suggested something unexpected.

"The terrace."

She looked confused.

"Why there?"

"We can watch the moon."

She accepted immediately.

That night both rested beneath countless stars while moonlight painted silver across peaceful skies beautifully.

Harlina hugged Harris tightly.

She slept peacefully.

Comfortably.

Safely.

Exactly where she wanted being most.

But Harris never slept.

Not once.

Throughout entire night he stared silently toward stars while thinking about missing memories repeatedly endlessly.

The five missing minutes haunted him.

The monsters haunted him.

The Divine Suit haunted him.

The mysterious presence haunted him.

Yet despite everything, he occasionally looked toward sleeping Harlina beside him peacefully and smiled.

Morning arrived gradually.

Carefully Harris carried sleeping Harlina downstairs before placing her gently upon comfortable bed indoors there.

Then he entered kitchen.

Coffee brewed quietly.

He waited patiently.

One hour passed.

Then another.

Finally Harlina awakened.

Still sleepy.

Still adorable.

Harris reheated coffee carefully before giving it directly into her hands gently with affection there.

She smiled warmly.

For one beautiful moment everything felt perfectly normal again despite surrounding mysteries and dangers everywhere.

Then suddenly—

Harris sensed it.

The same killer presence.

But stronger.

Far stronger.

His smile disappeared immediately.

The coffee cooled silently.

And somewhere beyond the horizon, something terrible had already begun moving toward them.

TO BE CONTINUED...

BY HARRIS RAVI ⚔️ 🌙 📖

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 CHAPTER 4 – PART 1

THE ARROW OF GUILT

The morning felt peaceful, yet Harris could not relax because the same terrifying presence returned far stronger today.

Standing inside the kitchen, Harris quietly reheated coffee while watching sunlight enter through windows across the silent house.

The scent of coffee filled the room gently, but his instincts suddenly screamed danger louder than ever before.

A cold sensation rushed through his body immediately, freezing every thought inside his mind without warning completely.

The killer.

The same killer.

But stronger.

Far stronger.

Harris immediately dropped everything and sprinted upstairs faster than his exhausted body should normally allow anymore today.

His heart pounded violently while countless terrifying possibilities flashed through his mind repeatedly without mercy whatsoever there.

He reached Harlina's room instantly.

The door opened.

Harlina had just awakened.

She sat sleepily upon her bed while rubbing her eyes and struggling against morning drowsiness gently there.

The moment Harris saw her unharmed, overwhelming relief flooded through his entire body like a powerful wave.

For several seconds, he simply stared.

She was safe.

That was enough.

Without warning, Harris walked forward and lifted Harlina carefully into his arms immediately afterward without explanation.

Harlina froze completely.

Her sleepy brain stopped working instantly.

Her cheeks became bright red.

"H-Harris?" she asked softly while staring directly into his face with confusion and embarrassment together.

Ignoring her question, Harris carried her downstairs carefully and placed her gently upon the living room sofa.

Harlina continued staring.

Her face became even redder.

Finally she gathered enough courage.

"Why did you lift me down?" she asked while avoiding direct eye contact nervously there.

Harris immediately invented a lie.

"I thought you were tired."

The answer sounded suspicious.

Very suspicious.

Harlina narrowed her eyes.

Meanwhile Harris remembered dozens of painful slaps and smiled fearfully while preparing defensive excuses mentally already.

Unexpectedly, Harlina smiled.

A warm smile.

A beautiful smile.

"Thank you, Harris."

Before he could react, she leaned forward suddenly and kissed his cheek softly with affection there.

Everything stopped.

Harris froze completely.

His brain disconnected instantly.

The world vanished.

Time itself seemed to disappear.

For one entire minute, his mind refused functioning properly because of that unexpected kiss completely there.

Then—

CRASH!

The wall exploded.

A deadly arrow burst through shattered concrete while moving directly toward Harlina's heart without hesitation whatsoever there.

Harris sensed danger instantly.

But there was no time.

No time to push her away.

No time to create portals.

No time to think.

Only one choice remained.

Protect her.

His body moved instinctively.

He threw himself forward.

The arrow pierced directly through his right shoulder.

Blood erupted instantly.

Pain exploded throughout his body like fire.

The force threw him backward violently.

Red blood splashed across Harlina's clothes.

Across her hands.

Across her face.

For one horrifying moment, she thought he was dying.

"HARRIS!"

Her scream shook the entire house.

Tears formed immediately.

Harris struggled to stand despite unbearable agony consuming every nerve throughout his body continuously afterward there.

He turned instantly.

Searching.

Looking.

Hunting.

But the killer had vanished completely.

No energy.

No footprints.

No evidence.

Nothing.

Only silence remained.

The pain became worse.

Far worse than anything he previously experienced.

His vision blurred repeatedly.

Breathing became difficult.

His body trembled.

Yet his first thought remained Harlina.

"Are you okay?" he asked weakly.

That single question broke her heart.

She cried harder.

Thirty minutes later.

Harlina carried Harris toward the hospital desperately while supporting his weakened body during the entire journey there.

People watched.

People noticed.

But nobody helped.

Harlina ignored everyone.

Only Harris mattered.

She repeatedly called Koji.

Again.

Again.

Again.

Finally he answered.

Unfortunately, he was far away investigating clues regarding the monsters and mysterious masked fighter incident recently.

Unable to return immediately, Koji contacted Lunar urgently and requested emergency assistance immediately for Harris there.

Lunar arrived quickly.

Jekuna arrived alongside him.

Together they rushed Harris into treatment.

Doctors immediately recognized the severity of his condition.

The arrow had damaged critical areas deeply.

Emergency surgery became necessary.

Immediately.

The chief doctor approached Harlina carefully.

"There is one problem."

Harlina's heart sank instantly.

"The operation must happen while he remains conscious."

Silence filled the room.

Harlina shook her head immediately.

"No."

The answer came instantly.

"No."

Her voice trembled.

"No."

She could not imagine hearing him suffer.

The doctor sighed.

Then Harris spoke.

"I accept."

Harlina turned instantly.

Tears filled her eyes again.

"Harris..."

He smiled weakly.

"If this saves me, then do it."

The operation began.

Harlina could not stay.

She left the room.

The moment she exited—

A scream echoed through the hospital.

Harris.

Another scream followed.

Then another.

Then another.

Every scream carried unbearable pain.

Every scream shattered Harlina's heart repeatedly.

Minutes became hours.

Hours became torture.

Five full hours passed.

Five hours of pain.

Five hours of screaming.

Five hours of suffering.

Harlina sat outside crying continuously while praying desperately for his safety and recovery throughout operation procedures.

Finally the operation ended.

Doctors emerged exhausted.

Harris survived.

But the pain remained.

When Harlina entered the room, Harris lay motionless upon the hospital bed beneath bright lights above.

His face looked pale.

His body looked fragile.

His right arm barely moved.

Harlina approached slowly.

Then—

SLAP!

The entire room froze.

Even Harris blinked.

She immediately started crying afterward.

"Why did you do that?"

Another tear fell.

"Why?"

Another tear.

"Why must you always protect everyone while destroying yourself?"

Harris remained silent.

Because he had no answer.

Several hours later Koji finally arrived.

After hearing everything, his expression became extremely serious.

He approached Harris directly.

"Harris."

Harris looked up.

"Did you sense him beforehand?"

For a moment Harris considered lying.

Then he noticed Harlina staring directly into his soul suspiciously nearby from her chair.

His survival instincts failed.

SLAP!

Another warning.

"Tell the truth."

Harris surrendered instantly.

"I sensed him before she woke up."

Silence filled the room.

"I went upstairs because I was worried."

Koji listened carefully.

"I carried her downstairs."

Another pause.

"Then I failed."

His voice cracked.

"I sensed danger."

"I knew something was wrong."

"But I failed."

The room became silent.

Koji understood immediately.

A new killer existed.

A dangerous one.

Meanwhile Lunar approached carrying important information regarding the Third Book mystery investigation efforts recently discovered.

"Harris."

He handed several papers forward.

"The book contains languages nobody recognizes."

Harris lowered his head.

The guilt became unbearable.

Too much.

Far too much.

Tears appeared.

Then finally—

He broke.

"I am weak."

Everyone looked shocked.

"I couldn't protect my girlfriend."

His voice shattered.

"I couldn't even protect the person most precious to me."

He slapped himself.

Hard.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Blood appeared.

Tears continued.

"I am weak."

Another slap.

"I am weak."

Another slap.

"I am weak."

Harlina immediately grabbed him.

Koji tried stopping him.

Lunar intervened.

Jekuna joined instantly.

Eventually they tied his left arm using rope just to prevent further injuries completely there.

Yet Harris continued crying.

Not because of pain.

Because of guilt.

Because he failed.

Because he was human.

Then suddenly—

GRRRRRRRRRR.

The room became silent.

Everyone looked downward.

Toward Harris's stomach.

Another loud growl echoed.

Harris froze instantly.

Embarrassment replaced sadness.

His face turned completely red.

The room exploded into laughter.

Even Harlina smiled through tears.

For the first time since morning, genuine happiness returned briefly throughout the room despite circumstances surrounding them.

Harlina immediately left.

Several minutes later she returned carrying food and water carefully arranged for him nearby there.

She sat beside him.

Then gently fed him.

One bite.

Then another.

Then another.

Harris ate quietly.

Everyone watched.

Nobody interrupted.

The room felt peaceful.

Warm.

Safe.

Lunar secretly took a photograph.

A memory.

A precious memory.

One worth protecting forever.

After eating, Harris attempted speaking.

Suddenly—

His instincts screamed.

He thought another slap approached.

Immediately he leaned away.

Everyone stared.

Especially Harlina.

Several moments passed.

Then she grabbed another rope.

Harris immediately understood danger.

"No."

Too late.

She tied both hands.

Then both legs.

Then tied her own hand to his hand.

The room became silent again.

"Harlina."

She smiled.

"Harlina."

She continued smiling.

"Harlina."

Still smiling.

"I am not a criminal."

No response.

Harris turned desperately toward Koji.

Nothing.

Toward Lunar.

Nothing.

Toward Jekuna.

Nothing.

None of them possessed enough courage arguing against Harlina's decisions anymore after witnessing her current emotional state.

Thus they retreated strategically.

Very strategically.

Leaving Harris completely defenseless.

Meanwhile the investigation continued.

The mystery deepened further.

And somewhere far away.

The killer remained hidden.

Watching.

Waiting.

Preparing.

TO BE CONTINUED IN CHAPTER 4 PART 2...

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 CHAPTER 4 – PART 2

THE CRYSTAL OF SILENCE

The hospital room became quiet after Koji, Lunar, and Jekuna departed to continue investigating mysterious incidents everywhere.

Only Harris and Harlina remained.

The afternoon sunlight entered softly through windows while silence settled comfortably around both of them together.

For several minutes neither spoke.

Both simply listened to each other's breathing while exhaustion slowly consumed their remaining energy completely today.

Yet Harris noticed something.

Something wrong.

Something Harlina was trying desperately to hide from everyone nearby during these difficult moments recently.

Her face looked pale.

Her eyes seemed tired.

Her hands trembled slightly.

She had not eaten.

Harris immediately realized the truth.

"Harlina."

She looked up instantly.

"Did you eat?"

Her answer arrived too quickly.

"Yes."

A lie.

A terrible lie.

One of the worst lies Harris had ever heard throughout his entire life before now.

Harris narrowed his eyes carefully.

She immediately avoided eye contact.

That confirmed everything.

Unfortunately his hands remained tied.

His legs remained tied.

And Harlina remained stubborn.

A terrifying combination.

An idea suddenly appeared.

"Harlina."

"What?"

"Can you bring me juice and fruits?"

She looked surprised.

"Now?"

"Please."

She nodded gently and left immediately afterward while wondering why he suddenly requested food unexpectedly there.

Several minutes later she returned carrying juice, fruits, and several snacks carefully arranged upon a tray.

She sat beside him.

Then prepared feeding him.

Before she could begin—

Harris turned away.

Refusing.

Harlina blinked.

"Harris?"

"No."

"Huh?"

"First you eat."

Silence.

She understood immediately.

Tears appeared.

"Harris..."

He smiled gently.

"I know you didn't eat."

More tears formed.

"If my hands weren't tied, I would feed you myself."

Her heart melted instantly.

"Even if I couldn't move my arms."

Another tear fell.

"Even through pain."

Another tear.

"I would still feed you."

Harlina cried happily.

For several moments she could not speak.

Then finally she began eating.

One bite for herself.

One bite for Harris.

Another bite for herself.

Another bite for Harris.

The simple meal became one of their most precious moments together despite everything happening around them recently.

The evening arrived slowly.

Outside the hospital, darkness covered the city while countless lights illuminated distant streets beautifully beneath stars.

Inside the room, Harlina remained beside Harris continuously.

She refused leaving.

Not even once.

Not for food.

Not for rest.

Not for herself.

Only Harris mattered.

Eventually she began singing softly.

A gentle song.

A peaceful song.

A song from childhood.

The melody filled the room quietly.

Harris listened silently.

The pain lessened.

His fears weakened.

His heartbeat relaxed.

For the first time that day.

He felt safe.

But another problem appeared.

Harlina refused sleeping.

She kept watching him.

Protecting him.

Waiting.

Guarding.

As if she feared he might disappear if she closed her eyes even briefly afterward there.

Harris noticed immediately.

He pretended sleeping first.

Then secretly used Void energy.

The rope around one hand broke silently.

Harris carefully sat up.

Before Harlina could react, he lifted her gently into his arms.

"H-Harris?"

"No arguments."

Her cheeks turned red instantly.

He carried her carefully toward the hospital bed.

Then pulled her beside him.

Then hugged her tightly.

Very tightly.

"Harris?"

"Please sleep."

His voice sounded tired.

Very tired.

"I'll be okay."

Her eyes filled with tears.

Happy tears.

She slowly nodded.

Then rested against him.

Minutes later.

Both finally slept.

Together.

For the entire night.

The moon watched through the window while silence protected their peaceful rest until morning finally arrived.

Several hours later.

Koji returned carrying new information.

Important information.

Extremely important information.

However, he stopped immediately upon entering.

Harris and Harlina remained asleep.

Still hugging.

Koji stared silently.

Then sighed.

Then sat down.

Then waited.

Two full hours passed.

Finally movement appeared.

Harlina awakened first.

She opened her eyes slowly.

Then noticed Koji.

Then noticed their position.

Then noticed everything.

Her entire face turned bright red.

Instantly.

She nearly jumped off the bed.

Koji laughed loudly.

Very loudly.

Meanwhile Harris remained confused.

"What happened?"

Nobody answered immediately.

Several awkward moments passed.

Then everyone finally sat down.

Koji cleared his throat.

"Harris."

"Any lead?"

Koji smiled.

"I knew you would ask that first."

Then his expression became serious.

"I found a clue about the Mask Man."

The room froze.

Especially Harris.

Sweat appeared instantly.

His heartbeat accelerated.

Panic attacked from every direction.

Yet somehow he maintained a calm expression.

"What clue?"

Before Koji answered, Harlina noticed something.

"Harris."

He froze.

"Why are you sweating?"

More panic.

"Body heat."

The worst excuse imaginable.

Harlina looked unconvinced.

Fortunately Koji continued speaking.

"On the Mask Man's chest there is a symbol."

Silence.

"The same symbol exists on the Third Book's front page."

Harris immediately relaxed.

His soul nearly left his body beforehand.

Now it returned.

"Oh."

Koji nodded.

"If we find him, he might know how to read the book."

Harris agreed immediately.

"You're right."

Very right.

Please investigate him forever.

Just don't discover it is me.

Those thoughts remained inside his head.

Koji departed afterward.

The investigation continued.

The mystery deepened further.

Later Harlina left briefly.

She bought coffee.

Food.

Several necessities.

Then washed her face before returning to Harris again.

A new day had begun.

A new mystery had begun.

And Harris remained trapped between them both.

Love.

And danger.

Throughout the afternoon Harris carefully observed every detail around him continuously while remaining suspicious about everything nearby.

The killer remained somewhere.

Watching.

Waiting.

Planning.

Then suddenly—

SLAP!

Harris blinked.

Harlina stood nearby.

"Come here."

Harris rubbed his cheek.

Smiling.

The familiar pain almost felt normal now.

Almost.

Then his instincts exploded.

The killer.

Again.

The sensation returned stronger than before.

Harris scanned every direction immediately.

Nothing.

No evidence.

No presence.

No movement.

Then suddenly he sensed something horrifying.

An attack.

Two kilometers away.

Traveling rapidly.

Target.

Harlina.

Harris's eyes widened.

His body could barely move.

His injuries remained severe.

He had only seconds.

Then inspiration arrived.

Immediately Harris opened a Void Portal near the window.

A second portal opened directly before his own body.

The attack approached.

Faster.

Faster.

Faster.

Harlina sensed danger too.

She attempted moving Harris away.

Too late.

The attack entered the portal.

Then emerged directly toward Harris.

A deadly projectile.

Straight toward his chest.

Then—

Something happened.

The Divine Suit appeared instantly.

Without permission.

Without warning.

Without command.

Dark energy covered Harris completely.

The attack vanished.

Absorbed.

Destroyed.

Silence followed.

Harlina stared in shock.

The atmosphere changed completely.

Harris changed too.

His posture changed.

His expression changed.

His eyes changed.

Then suddenly—

He vanished.

Instantly.

Miles away.

The killer sensed danger and attempted escaping.

Too late.

This time there was no battle.

No struggle.

No chance.

Four punches.

One Eternal Arrow.

Five attacks.

That was all.

The killer shattered immediately.

His body transformed into crimson crystal fragments before scattering across the battlefield entirely afterward there.

Silence remained.

Harris collected the largest crystal carefully.

Then traveled toward the Void Throne.

There he placed the crystal safely.

Then sat silently.

Thinking.

Remembering.

Questioning.

Meanwhile Harlina searched desperately.

Again.

Just like before.

Fear returned.

Panic returned.

Memories returned.

Finally she found him sitting upon the Throne deep within darkness and endless silence surrounding him.

"Harris!"

No response.

"Harris!"

Still nothing.

Then finally—

"Keep silent."

The answer frightened her.

Completely.

That voice felt unfamiliar.

Cold.

Ancient.

Lonely.

Then suddenly the Divine Suit disappeared.

Harris collapsed immediately afterward.

His injuries had healed completely.

Yet all energy vanished.

He could barely move.

Harlina rushed forward instantly.

She lifted him into her arms carefully.

"What happened?"

Her voice trembled.

Tears appeared again.

Harris looked confused.

"I remember only one thing."

She listened carefully.

"I sensed the attack."

Pause.

"I tried protecting you."

Another pause.

"After that, I remember nothing."

The missing memories returned again.

The mystery deepened again.

Slowly they returned home together.

Supporting each other.

Step by step.

When they finally arrived—

Both froze.

The house stood perfectly repaired.

Not a single mark remained.

No damage.

No destruction.

Nothing.

The sight shocked both completely.

Neither understood how.

Neither possessed answers.

Inside the house Harlina immediately entered the kitchen.

Determination filled her eyes.

Harris needed food.

Lots of food.

She cooked everything possible.

Soup.

Rice.

Vegetables.

Meat.

Desserts.

Everything.

Then she fed him.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Eventually Harris surrendered.

He physically could not eat more.

Harlina disagreed.

Food continued arriving.

Then Koji and Lunar arrived.

They entered.

Then stopped.

Harris's face contained enough food for three people.

Both nearly collapsed laughing.

Harlina slapped the table.

Instant silence followed.

Professional investigators became obedient children instantly afterward without further resistance whatsoever there.

After hearing everything, Koji and Lunar became shocked.

Questions increased.

Answers remained zero.

The afternoon passed peacefully.

Then suddenly Harris turned.

"Harlina, lunch?"

No response.

"Harlina?"

Still silence.

Fear entered immediately.

Harris turned around.

A terrifying mask stared directly at him.

He screamed.

Actually screamed.

Then hugged Harlina tightly.

Very tightly.

"Don't do that again!"

For a moment Harlina stopped joking.

Because she understood.

He truly feared losing her.

That realization warmed her heart deeply.

Soon she prepared lunch.

Harris attempted helping.

SLAP.

Rejected immediately.

Thus Harris sat nearby watching her cook.

Continuously.

Without blinking.

Harlina's face became red.

"Please look somewhere else."

"No."

"Harris."

"No."

Eventually lunch finished.

They fed each other again.

The evening arrived.

Together they watched a horror movie.

A terrible decision.

Especially for Harlina.

Every scary scene made her move closer.

Then closer.

Then closer.

Eventually she hugged Harris tightly.

His face became completely red.

Night arrived.

After dinner they prepared sleeping.

This time Harris spoke first.

"Can we sleep together?"

Harlina froze.

Then smiled.

"Okay."

That night both slept peacefully together.

Protected.

Safe.

Loved.

Yet deep within sleep, Harris saw something horrifying.

A strange face.

Unknown.

Ancient.

Terrifying.

And it wanted only one thing.

Harlina's death.

Harris awoke instantly.

Breathing heavily.

Sweating.

Terrified.

Harlina awakened too.

"What happened?"

"Just a dream."

She immediately hugged him.

Then kissed his forehead gently.

Harris froze again.

Completely.

His face turned bright red.

"If you're going to kiss me..."

His voice weakened.

"At least inform me first."

Harlina laughed softly.

Her cheeks turned red too.

"Okay."

Then she hugged him again.

"Now sleep."

Morning finally arrived.

Both opened their eyes simultaneously.

The first thing they saw was each other's face.

And for one peaceful moment.

No monsters existed.

No killers existed.

No mysteries existed.

Only happiness.

Only love.

Only them.

TO BE CONTINUED IN CHAPTER 5...

BY HARRIS RAVI ⚔️ 🌙 ❤️ 📖

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 1 – FEAR OF LOSING LIGHT

Morning arrived peacefully while golden sunlight slipped through curtains, blessing the room with warmth, comfort, hope, and serenity today.

For several precious moments, Harris and Harlina simply stared silently into each other's eyes, enjoying happiness without interruptions today.

No enemies existed during those beautiful seconds, no assassins hunted them, and no mysteries demanded immediate answers anymore.

Only two hearts remained together, sharing peace after countless battles, sacrifices, fears, injuries, and emotional storms recently endured.

Harlina smiled softly while noticing Harris watching her without blinking, making her immediately become embarrassed and flustered.

"Why are you staring continuously?" she asked quietly while hiding part of her face beneath blankets shyly today.

"Because you're beautiful," Harris answered honestly without hesitation, causing her heart to immediately lose rhythm completely today.

Her cheeks turned bright red instantly while she pulled the blanket higher, refusing direct eye contact afterward.

Seeing her reaction made Harris laugh softly while enjoying every adorable expression appearing across her face today.

"Stop laughing," Harlina complained quietly while secretly enjoying the attention more than she wanted admitting publicly.

The room filled with warmth, comfort, and affection that neither darkness nor destiny could easily destroy today.

Eventually Harris stretched lazily before standing and walking toward the kitchen preparing breakfast and coffee carefully.

"I'll return soon," Harris promised while leaving the room carrying his peaceful smile with him today.

Harlina nodded quietly while watching him disappear beyond the doorway, still feeling warmth inside her chest.

Inside the kitchen, Harris prepared coffee carefully while remembering countless memories shared together over recent years.

The aroma slowly spread throughout the house while sunlight illuminated every corner with gentle golden beauty.

For once, everything felt normal.

For once, no emergencies existed.

For once, Harris felt like an ordinary person living an ordinary morning alongside someone precious today.

He prepared two cups carefully, ensuring the temperature remained perfect because Harlina always preferred warm coffee.

A small smile appeared while imagining her sleepy expression after receiving the drink from him today.

Carrying both cups carefully, Harris returned toward the bedroom expecting another peaceful conversation before breakfast arrived.

He opened the bedroom door slowly.

The smile disappeared immediately.

The room stood completely empty.

Harlina was gone.

At first Harris assumed she visited another room without informing him beforehand, nothing unusual there today.

"Harlina?" he called casually while placing both coffee cups upon a nearby table carefully there.

No answer arrived.

His smile weakened slightly.

"Harlina?" he repeated louder while glancing toward every corner inside the bedroom again nervously today.

Still no answer arrived.

A strange feeling appeared inside his chest.

A feeling he hated deeply.

Fear.

He immediately left the bedroom and checked nearby rooms expecting to find her somewhere casually wandering around.

The bathroom remained empty.

The hallway remained empty.

The guest room remained empty.

The living room remained empty.

Every location remained completely silent.

The silence itself felt wrong.

It felt unnatural.

It felt dangerous.

"Harlina!"

This time his voice echoed loudly throughout the house while panic slowly began consuming his thoughts.

Still no answer.

His breathing became slightly heavier.

His heartbeat accelerated.

Countless terrible possibilities immediately invaded his mind without mercy, logic, or restraint whatsoever today suddenly.

What if enemies discovered their location?

What if assassins attacked unexpectedly?

What if someone kidnapped her while he prepared coffee?

What if she called for help and nobody heard?

The thoughts became increasingly horrifying.

The memories became increasingly painful.

Images of previous battles flashed through his mind repeatedly while fear grew larger every second.

He remembered hospitals.

He remembered blood.

He remembered injuries.

He remembered standing helplessly while precious people suffered before his eyes during countless tragedies previously.

"No..."

Harris shook his head desperately.

Nothing happened.

Nothing happened.

Nothing happened.

Yet his heart refused listening.

His body continued trembling.

He searched every room again.

Then again.

Then again.

The house remained empty.

His breathing became unstable.

Tears slowly formed.

For most people, a missing person inside a house might create simple confusion for several minutes.

For Harris, it created terror.

Because Harris already knew exactly how quickly happiness could disappear forever without warning someday.

He rushed outside immediately.

The garden remained empty.

The pathways remained empty.

The nearby training grounds remained empty.

Everywhere felt empty.

Everywhere felt wrong.

"HARLINA!"

This time the scream carried genuine fear.

Birds scattered across the sky.

The wind itself seemed silent.

Still no answer arrived.

His hands trembled violently now.

His eyes became wet.

His chest hurt.

Because every passing second strengthened one terrifying possibility.

Maybe she was gone.

Maybe somebody took her away.

Maybe he failed again.

Maybe he wasn't strong enough.

The same nightmare repeated endlessly throughout his life.

People suffered.

People disappeared.

People got hurt.

And Harris always blamed himself afterward.

The fear became unbearable.

Then suddenly—

A horrifying face appeared directly before him without warning whatsoever, causing immediate instinctive reaction from Harris.

The face looked unnatural.

The face looked terrifying.

The face looked almost inhuman.

Without thinking, Harris raised his hand instantly.

The slap never landed.

Because the mask disappeared.

And underneath stood Harlina.

Laughing.

Completely unharmed.

Completely safe.

Completely unaware of what happened inside Harris during the last several terrifying minutes today already.

For several seconds Harris remained frozen.

His mind stopped working.

His body stopped moving.

His heart finally realized she remained safe.

Then everything collapsed.

The coffee.

The fear.

The panic.

The helplessness.

The loneliness.

The terror.

Every emotion exploded simultaneously.

Tears burst from his eyes immediately.

Before Harlina understood anything, Harris hugged her tightly and refused letting go whatsoever there.

His body trembled violently.

His breathing remained unstable.

His tears soaked her shoulder.

"H-Harris?"

Harlina blinked repeatedly.

She expected surprise.

She expected laughter.

She expected annoyance.

She never expected this.

"Don't do that again."

His voice cracked.

"Please don't do that again."

The words sounded broken.

Desperate.

Terrified.

Harlina's smile disappeared completely.

She suddenly realized something serious happened.

"Harris..."

She tried speaking softly.

He hugged her tighter.

"Don't become silent like that again."

His voice shook.

"I thought something happened."

"I thought someone took you away."

"I thought I lost you."

The final sentence shattered her completely.

Because she finally understood.

He wasn't angry.

He wasn't annoyed.

He wasn't embarrassed.

He was terrified.

For several moments neither spoke.

The wind moved gently around them.

The world remained silent.

Harlina slowly placed her arms around him carefully while understanding his fear little by little today.

Yet confusion remained.

Because she never expected such an extreme reaction from a harmless prank before today happened.

After several minutes she finally asked quietly.

"Why are you crying now?"

The question sounded innocent.

But the timing destroyed everything.

Harris froze immediately.

The fear remained fresh.

The pain remained fresh.

The terror remained fresh.

And hearing that question felt like nobody understood what he experienced moments earlier completely today.

His expression changed.

His grip loosened.

His eyes lowered.

Something inside him hurt deeply.

"Why am I crying?"

The words escaped quietly.

Not angrily.

Not loudly.

Just painfully.

Harlina noticed immediately.

But she didn't understand why.

"I just asked—"

"Are you playing with my feelings?"

His voice suddenly became sharper.

Harlina froze.

For the first time today, genuine hurt appeared inside her eyes.

The distance between them returned instantly.

The warmth disappeared.

The peace disappeared.

The happiness disappeared.

Only pain remained.

And neither realized this small misunderstanding would create one of their most emotional days ever.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 1B...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 2 – THE WEIGHT OF FEAR

The morning warmth vanished completely while silence settled between them like an invisible wall nobody understood today.

Harlina stood motionless while watching Harris lower his eyes and step backward from her slowly there.

His tears remained visible.

His hands still trembled.

Yet somehow his voice sounded colder than before.

"Are you playing with my feelings?" Harris repeated quietly while avoiding direct eye contact completely today there.

The question struck Harlina harder than any enemy attack she experienced throughout recent years together.

Because she never intended hurting him.

Because she never intended frightening him.

Because she only wanted making him laugh.

Nothing more.

Nothing less.

Yet the result became completely different.

"I was only joking," she whispered softly while trying understanding why everything changed suddenly today.

Harris closed his eyes briefly.

The words failed calming him.

Instead they deepened the pain.

Because during those terrifying minutes, the fear felt completely real to him.

The fear wasn't a joke.

The panic wasn't a joke.

The tears weren't a joke.

The nightmare wasn't a joke.

For several moments neither spoke.

Only the wind moved around them quietly.

Only silence answered their hearts.

Finally Harris spoke again.

"Don't speak with me today."

The sentence escaped before he could stop himself completely.

The moment those words left his mouth, regret appeared immediately inside his heart.

But pride prevented taking them back.

Without another word, Harris turned around and walked away from the house alone today silently.

Harlina remained standing there.

Frozen.

Confused.

Heartbroken.

She watched his figure disappear farther into the distance until completely vanishing from sight eventually today.

The house suddenly felt empty.

The warmth disappeared.

The laughter disappeared.

Everything felt colder somehow.

She slowly returned inside.

The two cups of coffee remained untouched upon the table still waiting silently there.

One belonged to Harris.

One belonged to Harlina.

Neither would drink them.

The sight made her chest hurt strangely.

For the first time she began questioning the prank completely.

Maybe she made a mistake.

Maybe she underestimated his feelings.

Maybe she truly scared him.

Hours passed slowly afterward.

The house remained quiet.

Harlina sat alone repeatedly remembering every moment from earlier that morning over and over.

She remembered his tears.

She remembered his trembling voice.

She remembered his desperate hug.

Most importantly—

She remembered the sentence.

"I thought I lost you."

Those words refused leaving her mind.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Eventually she placed her hand over her heart and closed her eyes quietly today there.

"He really became scared."

The realization arrived fully.

Not partially.

Not vaguely.

Completely.

A warmth mixed with sadness spread through her chest immediately after understanding everything more clearly today.

Because someone fearing your disappearance that much meant something important beyond ordinary affection entirely.

Someone feared losing you.

Someone needed you.

Someone loved you deeply.

The thought made her smile slightly despite the sadness still lingering within her heart today.

At the same time guilt appeared.

Because she caused that fear.

Because she accidentally hurt someone precious.

The afternoon continued passing slowly.

The clock seemed moving slower than usual.

Every minute felt longer.

Every room felt emptier.

Every memory felt louder.

Meanwhile Harris trained alone far away from the house without stopping once throughout the day.

His punches carried frustration.

His movements carried regret.

His thoughts carried pain.

Every strike against training targets echoed his emotional conflict continuously throughout the afternoon today.

Why did he become angry?

Why did he say those words?

Why did he leave?

The questions repeated endlessly inside his mind.

Because deep down he already knew something important.

He wasn't angry at Harlina.

He was angry at fear itself.

He hated feeling helpless.

He hated feeling powerless.

Most importantly—

He hated imagining a world without Harlina.

The possibility alone terrified him beyond reason.

As the sun slowly descended, the sky transformed into beautiful shades of orange and gold.

Back at home, Harlina prepared fresh coffee once again carefully for Harris today despite everything.

She wanted apologizing properly.

She wanted fixing everything.

She wanted seeing his smile again.

The coffee waited patiently beside her.

So did she.

Minutes passed.

Hours passed.

The coffee cooled.

Harris never returned.

The evening eventually surrendered completely to darkness and night arrived silently outside today slowly.

Concern replaced sadness.

Sadness replaced frustration.

Fear replaced concern.

The cycle continued growing stronger.

Finally Harlina picked up her communication device and called Harris immediately without hesitation whatsoever tonight.

No answer.

She called again.

No answer.

Again.

No answer.

Again.

Nothing.

Each unanswered call increased her fear significantly until breathing became difficult for her tonight already.

The same fear Harris experienced earlier now slowly entered her own heart deeply today.

What if something happened?

What if enemies attacked?

What if he got injured?

What if he never returned?

The thoughts became unbearable.

Unable waiting longer, she rushed toward the throne searching desperately for him throughout nearby locations tonight.

The throne stood silent.

Empty.

Dark.

No sign of Harris existed anywhere.

Her hands began trembling.

Her eyes became wet.

For the first time today she truly understood his fear completely.

Because now she felt exactly the same thing.

She immediately contacted Koji.

The call connected quickly.

"Koji..."

Her voice cracked.

Instantly Koji understood something serious happened somewhere unexpectedly today requiring immediate attention from everyone nearby.

"Harlina, what's wrong?"

"Harris disappeared."

The words carried genuine fear.

Koji stood immediately.

His expression changed instantly.

Within moments he began contacting Harris repeatedly through every available communication channel tonight urgently.

After numerous attempts, one call finally connected successfully.

"Harris."

Koji's voice sounded firm.

"What happened?"

Harris answered calmly from somewhere unknown.

"What happened, Master?"

The response surprised Koji slightly.

Because Harris rarely sounded this distant before.

"Where are you right now?"

"Training."

"Why aren't you answering Harlina's calls?"

Silence followed.

Several seconds passed.

Then Harris declined the conversation entirely.

The connection ended.

Koji stared at the device quietly.

Something clearly remained unresolved.

Immediately he contacted Harlina again and requested the complete story from beginning today carefully there.

She explained everything honestly.

The prank.

The mask.

The hiding.

The fear.

The tears.

The argument.

Everything.

Koji listened silently.

When the explanation finished, he remained speechless several moments while processing everything carefully today there.

"That's all?"

Harlina blinked.

"Yes."

Koji looked genuinely shocked.

Because the reason seemed incredibly simple.

Yet Harris reacted extremely strongly.

Something deeper existed underneath everything.

Something nobody fully understood yet.

Koji sighed slowly.

"He'll return before midnight."

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 3A...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 3A – THE LONGEST EVENING

The house became unbearably quiet after Harris left, leaving behind silence, regret, confusion, and countless unanswered emotions today.

Harlina remained standing near the doorway while staring toward the path where Harris disappeared completely earlier today.

She expected him returning quickly.

She expected him cooling down.

She expected everything becoming normal again.

Instead, the hours continued passing.

And Harris never returned.

Slowly she walked back inside the house carrying emotions she couldn't fully understand at all today.

The untouched coffee still remained upon the table exactly where Harris placed it earlier this morning.

One cup belonged to him.

One cup belonged to her.

Neither had been touched.

Neither had been enjoyed.

The sight somehow hurt more than expected.

Because those cups represented a peaceful morning destroyed before it even truly started today completely.

Harlina sat quietly beside them while staring at the slowly cooling coffee without speaking for hours.

The silence felt different now.

Not peaceful.

Not comforting.

Lonely.

Very lonely.

Eventually she lifted Harris' cup carefully and looked at her reflection appearing faintly upon its surface.

A small smile appeared.

Then disappeared.

Because another memory returned.

His tears.

His trembling voice.

His desperate hug.

His terrified expression.

"I thought I lost you."

The sentence returned again.

This time stronger.

This time clearer.

This time impossible ignoring.

She slowly lowered her eyes.

For the first time she completely understood why Harris reacted that way earlier today during her prank.

He wasn't angry because she hid.

He wasn't angry because she scared him.

He became angry because he suffered genuine terror.

The realization made her chest tighten painfully.

A person only fears losing something when that thing means everything to them completely and forever.

That thought warmed her heart.

Then broke it immediately afterward.

Because she accidentally became the reason behind that fear today without realizing the consequences earlier.

Outside, the afternoon sky slowly transformed while sunlight gradually surrendered itself toward the approaching evening darkness peacefully.

Inside, Harlina remained waiting.

Waiting.

And waiting.

The clock continued moving.

The house continued silent.

Her heart continued worrying.

Eventually she stood up and entered the kitchen once more determined to prepare fresh coffee again.

This time she prepared it carefully.

This time she prepared it hopefully.

This time she prepared it for Harris.

Because she wanted apologizing properly.

Because she wanted seeing his smile again.

Because she wanted fixing everything.

She placed the coffee upon the table carefully before sitting nearby waiting patiently throughout the evening today alone.

Minutes passed slowly.

Then another hour passed.

Then another.

The coffee gradually cooled.

The seat opposite her remained empty.

Her eyes occasionally moved toward the door.

Every sound made her hopeful.

Every sound disappointed her.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Eventually the beautiful orange evening sky disappeared completely beneath approaching darkness and countless distant stars above.

Night arrived.

But Harris still didn't.

The fear finally began growing.

At first it remained small.

Then it became noticeable.

Then it became overwhelming.

Her hands slowly tightened around her communication device.

"Harris..."

She whispered quietly.

Then she called him.

The call continued ringing.

No answer.

She called again.

No answer.

Again.

No answer.

Again.

Nothing.

Her breathing slowly became uneven.

A terrible feeling started spreading throughout her chest while countless possibilities entered her thoughts unexpectedly tonight.

What if something happened?

What if enemies attacked him?

What if he became injured?

What if he never returned?

The same questions Harris asked himself earlier now began haunting Harlina relentlessly without mercy or comfort.

Suddenly she understood everything.

Everything.

The panic.

The helplessness.

The fear.

The loneliness.

Everything Harris experienced earlier.

Now she felt it too.

And it terrified her.

Tears slowly appeared within her eyes while she continued calling him desperately tonight repeatedly without receiving answers.

No response.

No response.

No response.

Nothing.

The silence became unbearable.

Finally she stood up immediately.

"I can't wait anymore."

The sentence escaped firmly.

Moments later she rushed toward the Throne searching for Harris personally despite growing fear inside herself tonight.

The journey felt longer than usual.

The darkness felt heavier than usual.

Every shadow looked suspicious.

Every movement looked dangerous.

By the time she arrived at the Throne, her heart already raced uncontrollably from anxiety and worry.

"Harris!"

Her voice echoed loudly.

No answer.

"Harris!"

Again.

No answer.

The Throne remained empty.

Silent.

Cold.

Lifeless.

The realization shattered her remaining composure immediately.

Because now she genuinely believed something terrible happened somewhere beyond her knowledge and control tonight.

Tears escaped freely.

Her hands trembled.

Fear consumed her completely.

Without hesitation she contacted Koji.

The call connected instantly.

"Harlina?"

The moment she heard his voice, her emotions nearly collapsed entirely.

"Koji..."

Her voice broke immediately.

The concern in Koji's expression appeared instantly.

"What happened?"

"Harris disappeared."

The words carried genuine terror.

Koji stood immediately from his chair.

Nearby, Lunar also noticed the sudden seriousness and approached carefully to listen today quietly.

"What do you mean disappeared?"

Harlina explained everything.

The prank.

The argument.

The waiting.

The unanswered calls.

The empty Throne.

Everything.

Koji listened carefully.

Without interruption.

Without judgment.

Without assumptions.

When she finally finished speaking, silence followed briefly between them both tonight there sadly.

Then Koji sighed deeply.

"Harlina."

His voice softened.

"Tell me honestly."

She nodded.

"Do you regret it?"

The question struck deeply.

Because the answer came immediately.

Without hesitation.

Without doubt.

Without confusion.

"Yes."

Tears rolled down her cheeks again.

"I regret it."

Her voice sounded small.

Painful.

Broken.

"I didn't want hurting him."

Another tear followed.

"I thought he would laugh."

Another tear followed.

"I thought it would be funny."

Her shoulders trembled.

"I never wanted making him cry."

The confession broke her completely.

For several moments she simply cried quietly while Koji listened patiently from the other side today.

Finally Koji spoke.

"You know something?"

She remained silent.

"Harris isn't angry because of the prank."

She looked confused.

Koji continued.

"He's angry because he became scared."

The words immediately reminded her of the desperate hug.

The tears.

The trembling voice.

The fear.

Everything.

Koji sighed again.

"Most people don't understand Harris."

His voice sounded thoughtful.

"People see his strength."

"People see his courage."

"People see the Void Walker."

Another pause followed.

"But very few people see Harris."

The sentence remained heavy.

Meaningful.

True.

Koji continued speaking softly.

"He's afraid of losing people."

Harlina lowered her eyes.

"He always has been."

The silence returned briefly.

Then Koji smiled faintly.

"Don't worry."

She looked up hopefully.

"I'll find him."

The words carried confidence.

Reassurance.

Family.

Comfort.

For the first time tonight, her fear lessened slightly.

Not completely.

But enough.

Enough to breathe again.

Enough to hope again.

Enough to believe everything might still become okay eventually.

Nearby, Lunar already prepared for the search while listening carefully throughout the conversation tonight without interruption.

The moment Koji ended the call, Lunar immediately stood.

"We should hurry."

Koji nodded.

Because both understood something important.

Harris wasn't physically lost.

He was emotionally lost.

And sometimes—

Those were the hardest people to bring home.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 3B...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 3B – UNDER THE SAME MOON

The night deepened steadily while Koji and Lunar searched countless locations hoping finding Harris before emotions worsened further.

Meanwhile Harlina returned home slowly while carrying guilt heavier than any weapon she ever carried before today.

The house welcomed her with silence.

Not peaceful silence.

Painful silence.

The kind reminding someone exactly who remained absent from home tonight completely and painfully.

She walked toward the living room.

The coffee still waited.

Cold now.

Untouched.

Forgotten.

Just like the morning happiness.

Harlina sat quietly beside it.

Then she finally cried.

Not loudly.

Not dramatically.

Just honestly.

Because the loneliness hurt.

Because the guilt hurt.

Because missing Harris hurt.

Everything hurt.

The house suddenly felt far too large.

Every room reminded her of him.

Every object reminded her of him.

Every memory reminded her of him.

The couch reminded her of movie nights.

The kitchen reminded her of breakfast conversations.

The hallway reminded her of playful arguments.

The terrace reminded her of countless moonlit discussions together throughout previous years peacefully and lovingly.

Even the silence reminded her of him.

Because Harris somehow filled every corner of her world without realizing it himself completely today.

She hugged a pillow tightly.

Then another realization appeared.

A painful realization.

When Harris disappeared earlier, she became terrified immediately.

When his calls remained unanswered, she became terrified immediately.

When the Throne remained empty, she became terrified immediately.

Exactly like him.

Exactly.

For the first time she truly experienced his perspective.

And understanding it broke her heart.

Far away upon Throne Mountain, Harris sat silently beneath endless stars while staring toward the distant horizon tonight.

The wind moved through his hair gently.

The mountain remained silent.

The sky remained beautiful.

Yet none of it comforted him.

Because his thoughts remained trapped elsewhere.

Inside that empty bedroom.

Inside those terrifying minutes.

Inside the fear of losing Harlina.

Nearby, Koji and Lunar finally arrived.

Neither spoke immediately.

Both understood Harris needed time.

Eventually Koji sat beside him quietly.

Lunar remained standing nearby.

The stars continued shining above.

The mountain continued listening below.

And Harris continued staring forward silently.

Finally Koji spoke.

"You know she's crying."

The sentence struck instantly.

Harris lowered his eyes.

Because he already knew.

Deep inside—

He already knew.

"You scared her."

More silence followed.

Another painful truth.

Another wound.

Another regret.

Koji sighed softly.

"She made a mistake."

Harris remained silent.

"But so did you."

Those words finally reached him.

Because they were true.

Completely true.

Harris slowly closed his eyes.

He remembered the unanswered calls.

He remembered declining them.

He remembered leaving without explaining anything.

Regret immediately appeared.

Strong.

Heavy.

Painful.

For several moments nobody spoke.

Then Harris laughed sadly.

A small laugh.

A tired laugh.

A defeated laugh.

"I really am stupid."

Koji smiled slightly.

"Very."

Lunar nodded immediately.

"Extremely."

For the first time tonight, Harris smiled slightly.

A tiny smile.

But real.

The atmosphere softened.

The tension weakened.

The loneliness decreased.

Finally Koji stood.

"Let's go home."

This time Harris didn't resist.

Because there was only one place he truly wanted returning tonight.

Home.

And one person.

Harlina.

The journey home felt strangely quiet.

Yet comforting.

Like returning after wandering too far into darkness alone.

Eventually the house appeared ahead.

Warm lights glowed through windows.

Waiting.

Just like someone inside.

The moment Harris entered—

Everything happened instantly.

"HARRIS!"

The voice echoed throughout the entire house immediately.

Before he reacted—

Harlina crashed directly into him.

Her arms wrapped around him tightly.

Desperately.

Fearfully.

Emotionally.

The impact nearly pushed him backward.

Yet Harris didn't move.

Because he understood.

Completely.

She had been afraid too.

Very afraid.

"I'm sorry!"

She cried immediately.

The words escaped repeatedly.

Again.

And again.

And again.

"I'm sorry!"

Her voice cracked.

"I didn't mean it!"

Another apology followed.

"I never wanted hurting you!"

Another.

"I never wanted making you cry!"

Another.

The tears wouldn't stop.

Neither would the apologies.

Eventually Harris hugged her tightly.

Very tightly.

The same way he hugged her earlier.

The same way someone hugs something precious after almost losing it forever.

For several moments neither spoke.

Neither moved.

Neither cared about anyone watching.

Because some emotions deserved expressing completely.

Without embarrassment.

Without pride.

Without restraint.

Finally Harris spoke softly.

"I'm sorry too."

Harlina froze.

He continued.

"I shouldn't have ignored your calls."

Another pause followed.

"I shouldn't have left."

Another.

"And I definitely shouldn't have worried you."

The confession surprised her.

Because Harris rarely apologized first.

Yet tonight he did.

The warmth immediately returned.

The distance disappeared.

The misunderstanding finally ended.

Nearby, Koji smiled quietly.

Lunar smiled quietly.

The family felt whole again.

Then suddenly Harris asked—

"Did you eat?"

The question arrived completely unexpectedly.

Harlina immediately looked away.

A terrible sign.

Koji already knew the answer.

Lunar already knew the answer.

Harris already knew the answer.

"No."

The response escaped quietly.

Dangerous silence followed.

Very dangerous silence.

Harris slowly looked toward her.

Then toward the untouched dinner nearby.

Then back toward her.

The disappointment appeared immediately.

"You waited all day?"

Harlina remained silent.

"You seriously waited all day?"

More silence.

Koji quietly stepped backward.

Lunar quietly stepped backward.

Both recognized incoming trouble.

Suddenly Harlina found herself lifted effortlessly into the air without warning whatsoever tonight immediately there.

"H-HARRIS!"

Before understanding anything—

She ended up seated directly upon his lap.

A plate appeared.

Food appeared.

And Harris began feeding her personally.

One bite.

Then another.

Then another.

Harlina's face immediately transformed bright red.

Very bright red.

Almost glowing.

"I'm not a child!"

She protested desperately.

Harris remained completely calm.

"A child would have eaten dinner."

Direct hit.

Critical damage.

Emotional destruction.

Koji nearly laughed.

Lunar nearly laughed.

Harlina nearly exploded from embarrassment.

Yet secretly—

Very secretly—

She felt happy.

Extremely happy.

Because every action proved something important.

Harris cared.

Deeply.

Very deeply.

After several minutes she finally finished eating.

Then came revenge.

Her revenge.

Without warning she grabbed another spoon.

Then held it toward Harris.

The room became silent.

Harris blinked.

Koji blinked.

Lunar blinked.

Harlina's face turned red again.

"Your turn."

The sentence barely escaped.

Harris immediately understood.

The feeding revenge.

A dangerous technique.

An ancient technique.

An embarrassing technique.

Yet he accepted.

One bite.

Then another.

Then another.

Harlina fed him carefully.

Awkwardly.

Nervously.

Embarrassed beyond reason.

Every time their eyes met, her face became even redder.

By the end—

She looked completely defeated.

Koji finally laughed.

Lunar finally laughed.

Harlina immediately covered her face.

Then escaped toward her room.

Maximum embarrassment achieved successfully.

The entire house filled with laughter afterward.

A rare sound.

A beautiful sound.

A healing sound.

Much later—

The house became quiet again.

The stars shined above.

The moon illuminated the world softly.

And Harris eventually walked toward the terrace alone.

The cool night breeze greeted him immediately.

The moon hung beautifully overhead.

Yet his expression remained thoughtful.

Serious.

Heavy.

Because despite today's happiness—

Something still troubled him deeply.

A nightmare.

The same nightmare.

Repeatedly returning.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Footsteps approached quietly behind him.

Harlina.

She sat beside him without speaking.

For several moments both watched the moon silently together tonight beneath peaceful skies and gentle winds.

Finally she noticed something wrong.

"What are you thinking about?"

Harris hesitated briefly.

Then answered honestly.

"The dream."

Her expression changed immediately.

Because she already knew which dream.

The nightmare.

The terrifying nightmare.

The one involving her death.

The one haunting Harris repeatedly.

The one stealing his peace.

His hands slowly tightened.

"I keep seeing someone trying to kill you."

The confession sounded painful.

Very painful.

"And every time..."

His voice weakened.

"I arrive too late."

Silence followed.

The moon watched quietly above.

The stars listened quietly above.

And Harlina's heart broke quietly beside him.

Because now she understood everything.

The prank.

The fear.

The tears.

The anger.

Everything connected.

Everything originated from one place.

The fear of losing her.

Without warning she slapped his shoulder lightly.

Not angrily.

Lovingly.

Enough to interrupt his thoughts.

"Stop."

Harris blinked.

She looked directly into his eyes.

"I'm right here."

Another pause.

"And I'm not going anywhere."

The words entered directly into his heart.

Slowly.

Warmly.

Powerfully.

For the first time that night—

The nightmare felt smaller.

Not gone.

But smaller.

And that was enough.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 4...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 4 – THE NIGHT OF BLOOD AND FIRE

The moon continued shining peacefully above while Harris stared quietly at Harlina beside him on the terrace tonight.

Her words echoed repeatedly inside his mind.

"I'm right here."

"And I'm not going anywhere."

For a brief moment, the nightmare lost its power.

For a brief moment, fear loosened its grip.

For a brief moment, peace returned.

Harlina noticed the tension finally leaving his expression little by little while they remained together there tonight.

She gently bumped her shoulder against his.

A small gesture.

A simple gesture.

Yet it carried comfort.

The kind only family could provide.

The kind only love could provide.

Harris smiled faintly.

The first genuine smile since the nightmare conversation began tonight beneath the moonlight and stars above.

"Better?"

Harlina asked softly.

"A little."

His answer sounded honest.

Because the fear remained.

But now it felt lighter.

Manageable.

Bearable.

The moon watched silently while neither spoke for several minutes afterward together beneath the peaceful night sky.

Eventually Harlina yawned.

Then another yawn escaped.

Then another.

Harris laughed quietly.

"Someone is sleepy."

Immediately her cheeks turned red.

"I'm not sleepy."

Another yawn betrayed her instantly.

Harris laughed harder.

The sound made her even more embarrassed.

"Stop laughing."

"I can't."

"Why?"

"Because you're losing against sleep."

The argument continued harmlessly for several minutes while warmth slowly returned completely between them again tonight.

Finally Harris stood.

Then without warning—

He lifted Harlina into his arms.

Effortlessly.

Instantly.

Completely unexpectedly.

"H-HARRIS!"

Her entire face exploded red immediately.

The surprise destroyed every remaining defense she possessed against embarrassment tonight completely and utterly.

Meanwhile Harris remained calm.

Far too calm.

Dangerously calm.

"What?"

"You can't just lift people suddenly!"

"I just did."

The response caused critical emotional damage.

Maximum effectiveness achieved.

Harlina buried her face against his chest immediately trying hiding her embarrassment completely from existence tonight somehow.

Unfortunately it failed.

Because Harris continued smiling.

And because her face remained completely red.

The journey toward the bedroom felt longer than usual somehow.

Not because of distance.

Because of embarrassment.

Every second felt eternal.

Every heartbeat felt louder.

Every step increased her suffering.

Meanwhile Harris enjoyed everything.

Naturally.

Eventually they entered the bedroom together.

The room felt peaceful.

Safe.

Warm.

Exactly the opposite of the emotions both experienced earlier today completely and thankfully now.

Harris carefully placed her upon the bed.

For a moment neither moved.

For a moment neither spoke.

Then suddenly—

Harris leaned closer.

Very close.

Dangerously close.

Harlina froze instantly.

Her heartbeat accelerated immediately.

Her breathing stopped completely.

Her mind crashed.

Then—

A gentle kiss landed upon her cheek.

The world stopped.

Time stopped.

Reality stopped.

Everything stopped.

Except her heart.

Which immediately began attempting escape from her chest entirely tonight and forever perhaps.

Harris smiled.

"Goodnight."

Meanwhile Harlina remained completely frozen.

Unable speaking.

Unable moving.

Unable functioning normally.

The damage proved devastating.

After several seconds she finally recovered slightly.

Only slightly.

Her face remained red.

Very red.

Legendary red.

The kind capable challenging sunsets directly.

Eventually both settled beneath blankets together.

The room became quiet.

The world became quiet.

And slowly sleep approached.

Before drifting away completely, Harris wrapped his arms around Harlina gently while holding her close tonight peacefully.

She immediately moved closer.

Instinctively.

Comfortably.

Naturally.

Neither questioned it anymore.

Because this had become home.

Not the house.

Not the room.

Each other.

The night continued peacefully.

Hours passed.

Dreams arrived.

Silence ruled.

Then suddenly—

Harris' eyes snapped open.

A violent breath escaped.

His entire body became tense instantly.

Every instinct screamed danger.

Every sense activated.

Every warning inside him erupted simultaneously.

Something was wrong.

Very wrong.

Beside him Harlina awakened immediately after noticing his sudden reaction tonight unexpectedly and urgently.

"Harris?"

Her voice sounded sleepy initially.

Then concerned.

"What happened?"

Harris slowly sat upright.

His eyes scanned the darkness.

His breathing remained heavy.

Someone was watching.

He could feel it.

Clearly.

Powerfully.

Dangerously.

His instincts never lied.

Not about something like this.

"Someone's here."

The sentence immediately destroyed any remaining sleep inside the room tonight completely and instantly.

Harlina sat upright too.

Fear appeared immediately.

The atmosphere changed.

The air itself felt heavier.

Then—

Everything happened at once.

CRASH!

The bedroom window exploded violently.

Glass scattered everywhere.

A terrifying wave of energy rushed forward with destructive intent directly toward them immediately tonight.

Two assassins.

Not one.

Two.

Their attacks merged together.

Their powers fused together.

Creating something horrifying.

A massive arrow of blazing fire erupted through the darkness while carrying enough destructive force to obliterate everything.

The attack moved impossibly fast.

There wasn't enough time.

There wasn't enough distance.

There wasn't enough warning.

Only one choice remained.

Protect her.

Without hesitation—

Without thought—

Without fear—

Harris moved.

Immediately.

He threw himself directly between Harlina and the incoming attack tonight without caring about consequences whatsoever.

The fire arrow struck.

Directly.

The impact exploded violently.

Pain erupted instantly.

His left shoulder absorbed most of the attack.

Blood appeared immediately.

The force launched him backward.

The room shook.

The walls cracked.

The air burned.

Yet despite everything—

Harlina remained unharmed.

Because Harris stood before her.

Shielding her completely.

"HARRIS!"

Her scream echoed through the room.

Fear consumed her instantly.

The smell of blood filled the air.

The sight terrified her.

Yet before she could react further—

Another attack arrived.

A second projectile.

Faster.

Deadlier.

This one struck Harris' leg directly.

The impact nearly forced him collapsing immediately from overwhelming pain tonight and there.

Blood stained the floor.

His body weakened.

Yet Harris only thought about one thing.

Getting Harlina away.

Far away.

Somewhere safe.

Immediately he lifted her.

Ignoring pain.

Ignoring blood loss.

Ignoring injuries.

Ignoring everything.

Only her safety mattered.

"Harris, stop!"

She cried desperately.

"You're injured!"

No response.

He continued moving.

Step after painful step.

The assassins continued attacking relentlessly from outside the shattered building tonight while pursuing their targets mercilessly.

Every movement hurt.

Every step burned.

Every breath felt heavier.

Yet Harris refused slowing down.

Refused stopping.

Refused surrendering.

Because carrying Harlina mattered more than his own injuries tonight and forever if necessary completely.

Eventually they reached a temporary safe location far enough away for several moments protection from attacks there.

Harlina immediately grabbed her communication device.

Her hands trembled violently.

Fear overwhelmed her completely.

She called Koji instantly.

The call connected.

"Koji!"

Her voice cracked.

Koji immediately stood.

The urgency terrified him.

"Harlina?!"

"We're being attacked!"

The words hit like lightning.

"Harris is injured!"

Silence.

Then movement.

Immediate movement.

Koji rushed toward the exit.

Nearby Lunar followed instantly.

No hesitation.

No questions.

No delay.

Both moved faster than ever before.

Meanwhile Harris struggled remaining standing.

Blood continued flowing.

His shoulder burned.

His leg screamed.

His vision blurred occasionally.

Yet he still positioned himself between Harlina and danger tonight despite everything happening around them.

Then something happened.

Something unexpected.

Something terrifying.

Harris lowered his head.

Tears appeared.

"Harris?"

Harlina froze.

His voice trembled.

"I can't even protect my girlfriend."

The words sounded broken.

Defeated.

Painful.

Not because of physical injuries.

Because of emotional ones.

He blamed himself.

Again.

Just like always.

No matter how much he protected others.

No matter how much he sacrificed.

No matter how much he endured.

If someone precious got endangered—

He always blamed himself.

Always.

The sight broke Harlina's heart completely.

Before she could respond—

Koji and Lunar finally arrived.

Both immediately assessed the situation.

Both immediately noticed the injuries.

Both immediately understood the danger.

"Hospital."

Koji spoke firmly.

"Now."

Harris immediately shook his head.

"No."

Everyone froze.

"No?"

Koji repeated.

The answer sounded unbelievable.

Especially considering the amount of blood already visible tonight around him.

Yet Harris remained serious.

Very serious.

His eyes moved toward the darkness ahead.

Toward the assassins.

Toward the threat.

Toward the battle.

"I'm going to fight."

Silence.

Complete silence.

Everyone stared.

Everyone shocked.

Everyone horrified.

Harlina stepped forward immediately.

Then—

SLAP!

The sound echoed sharply.

Her hand connected directly against his face.

Hard.

Very hard.

Tears filled her eyes.

"Take treatment!"

She shouted.

The fear inside her exploded completely.

Yet Harris remained serious.

Unusually serious.

Dangerously serious.

For the first time tonight—

His expression contained absolute determination.

No hesitation.

No compromise.

No retreat.

Then suddenly—

A portal opened.

Dark energy swirled.

The battlefield called.

The assassins waited.

And Harris stepped forward.

"If I die here..."

The sentence immediately terrified everyone.

"...don't cry for me."

Harlina's entire world froze.

Fear consumed everything.

Before anyone could stop him—

The portal expanded.

The darkness deepened.

And the battle that would change everything prepared to begin.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 5...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 5 – THE VOICE OF THE CREATOR

The portal expanded violently while dark energy twisted around Harris like an approaching storm tonight before everyone there.

Harlina immediately grabbed his arm desperately while refusing allowing him entering the battlefield injured and bleeding tonight.

Blood continued dripping steadily from his shoulder.

Blood continued flowing from his damaged leg.

Every wound screamed for treatment.

Every wound demanded rest.

Yet Harris only stared forward.

Toward the assassins.

Toward the danger.

Toward the battle.

"Harris, please."

Harlina's voice broke completely.

The fear inside her became unbearable.

Moments earlier she almost lost him.

Now he planned walking directly toward death himself.

She couldn't accept it.

Wouldn't accept it.

Koji stepped forward immediately.

"This isn't courage."

His voice sounded firm.

"This is recklessness."

Lunar nodded silently beside him.

For several moments nobody moved.

Nobody spoke.

The night itself seemed waiting.

Waiting for Harris' decision.

Waiting for his answer.

Waiting for fate.

Then Harris lowered his head quietly.

His fists tightened.

His breathing became heavier.

His voice finally emerged.

"If I keep running..."

Silence followed.

The sentence felt incomplete.

Broken.

Painful.

Then he continued.

"They'll never stop hunting her."

The words struck everyone immediately.

Because they were true.

Painfully true.

Every assassin.

Every enemy.

Every shadow.

Every threat.

Eventually targeted people close to Harris.

And Harris hated that reality more than anything.

"I don't care what happens to me."

His voice remained quiet.

Dangerously quiet.

"But I won't let anything happen to her."

Harlina froze.

The fear.

The tears.

The argument.

Everything from earlier suddenly made sense again.

Every action.

Every decision.

Every emotion.

Everything came from the same place.

His love.

His fear.

His desperate desire protecting her no matter the cost.

Her eyes immediately filled with tears again.

Because Harris truly meant every word.

He always had.

The portal continued swirling.

The assassins waited somewhere beyond darkness.

Then suddenly—

A strange voice echoed inside Harris' mind.

A voice unlike any before.

Ancient.

Powerful.

Commanding.

One single word emerged.

"Activate."

Everything stopped.

The world became silent.

The battlefield froze.

Even Harris froze.

Because the voice felt different.

Not familiar.

Not hostile.

Something else entirely.

Something ancient.

Something connected directly to the Divine Suit itself.

Then—

The suit appeared.

Instantly.

Black energy erupted around Harris.

Silver patterns illuminated brightly.

Void energy exploded across the battlefield.

The Divine Suit awakened.

Yet something felt wrong.

Or perhaps—

Something felt right.

Everyone noticed immediately.

Koji noticed.

Lunar noticed.

Harlina noticed.

Even Harris noticed.

His attitude remained unchanged.

No arrogance.

No cold personality.

No behavioral shift.

No loss of control.

Nothing.

The usual transformation never occurred.

The Divine Suit covered his body completely.

Yet Harris remained Harris.

The realization shocked everyone.

Especially Harris.

"What?"

He stared at his own hands.

The energy felt different.

Calmer.

Controlled.

Listening.

Almost alive.

The mysterious voice spoke again.

"Fight."

The portal expanded fully.

The assassins appeared.

Two figures emerged from darkness.

One surrounded by violent purple flames.

The other surrounded by violet lightning.

Their presence distorted the air itself.

Even Koji felt danger immediately.

Even Lunar became serious instantly.

These enemies surpassed previous assassins considerably.

The battlefield remained silent.

Only the wind moved.

Only energy crackled.

Only destiny waited.

Then—

The battle began.

The first assassin attacked instantly.

Purple flames erupted across the battlefield like volcanic destruction released without restraint tonight suddenly everywhere.

The second assassin followed immediately.

Violet lightning descended from the sky.

The attacks merged.

The combination became devastating.

Entire sections of terrain exploded.

Mountains cracked.

Ground shattered.

The battlefield transformed into chaos.

Yet Harris moved.

Calmly.

Effortlessly.

For the first time ever—

The Divine Suit obeyed perfectly.

No resistance.

No conflict.

No struggle.

Every movement flowed naturally.

Like breathing.

Like instinct.

Like destiny.

The assassins attacked repeatedly.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Yet Harris dodged everything.

The speed shocked everyone.

The precision shocked everyone.

The control shocked everyone.

Even Harris himself couldn't believe it.

For years the Divine Suit felt like a wild beast.

Now—

It felt like a trusted partner.

The mysterious voice remained silent.

Watching.

Observing.

Judging.

The battle intensified further.

Purple flames collided against void energy.

Violet lightning shattered mountains.

Explosions illuminated the night sky endlessly.

The war felt apocalyptic.

Yet Harris continued advancing.

Step by step.

Attack by attack.

Relentlessly.

Thirty minutes passed.

Thirty brutal minutes.

Thirty impossible minutes.

Finally—

The first assassin fell.

The battlefield shook violently.

Purple energy erupted everywhere.

The assassin screamed.

Then disintegrated completely.

Only a crystal remained.

A glowing purple crystal.

Everyone stared.

Nobody understood.

Before questions formed—

The second assassin attacked desperately.

Everything he possessed erupted simultaneously.

Lightning covered the entire battlefield.

Destruction reached its peak.

Yet Harris remained standing.

Unshaken.

Focused.

Determined.

One final attack.

One final clash.

One final explosion.

Silence.

The battlefield became still.

The second assassin collapsed.

Then transformed.

Just like the first.

A violet crystal appeared where the assassin once stood.

Victory.

Finally.

Victory.

The battle ended.

The enemies disappeared.

The threat vanished.

The night became silent.

For several seconds nobody moved.

Nobody spoke.

Nobody breathed.

Then suddenly—

Harris collapsed.

Immediately.

Without warning.

The Divine Suit disappeared instantly.

His body crashed against the ground heavily.

Blood spread rapidly beneath him.

The injuries remained.

Worse than before.

Far worse.

This time they weren't healing.

They weren't regenerating.

They weren't disappearing.

The wounds remained completely active.

Dangerously active.

"HARRIS!"

Harlina reached him first.

Tears returned instantly.

Fear returned instantly.

Everything returned instantly.

His condition looked terrible.

His breathing weakened.

His pulse weakened.

His consciousness faded.

Koji immediately assessed the injuries.

His expression darkened.

"Hospital."

This time nobody argued.

Nobody resisted.

Nobody delayed.

Lunar quickly secured both crystals.

The purple crystal.

The violet crystal.

Neither felt ordinary.

Both radiated strange energy continuously.

Lunar carefully stored them.

Meanwhile Harris lost consciousness completely.

The world disappeared.

The battlefield disappeared.

The voices disappeared.

Darkness consumed everything.

The hospital lights replaced the stars hours later.

Machines monitored his condition constantly.

Doctors worked endlessly.

Days passed.

Two entire days passed.

Outside—

Harlina barely slept.

Koji remained worried.

Lunar studied the crystals secretly.

Inside Harris' unconscious mind—

Something impossible happened.

Darkness surrounded him.

Endless darkness.

Silent darkness.

Then footsteps echoed.

One figure appeared.

Then another.

The first carried an overwhelming presence.

Ancient.

Wise.

Powerful.

The second remained hidden within shadows.

Watching.

Waiting.

Judging.

Harris stared.

Confused.

Cautious.

The first figure smiled.

"I finally meet you."

The voice matched the one from the battlefield.

Immediately Harris understood.

This was him.

The voice.

The one who said activate.

The one connected to the Divine Suit.

The mysterious figure looked directly at Harris.

Then smiled again.

A calm smile.

A knowing smile.

A creator's smile.

And Harris felt something impossible.

Fear.

Wonder.

Curiosity.

All simultaneously.

Because deep inside—

He already sensed the truth.

This person wasn't ordinary.

Not even close.

And the answer waiting ahead would change everything forever.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 6...

VOID WALKER – SEASON 6 CHAPTER 5

PART 6 – THE CREATOR, THE THIRD VOICE, AND THE SECRET DOOR

Darkness stretched endlessly around Harris while the strange realm remained silent beyond imagination during his unconscious state.

No stars existed.

No sky existed.

No ground truly existed.

Only darkness.

And the two mysterious figures standing before him quietly while observing his reaction carefully there today.

The first figure smiled calmly.

The second figure remained hidden beneath shadows.

Neither appeared hostile.

Yet neither appeared ordinary.

Harris slowly stood while staring toward them cautiously and trying understanding exactly what happened recently there.

"Where am I?"

The question echoed through the darkness.

The smiling figure folded his arms calmly before answering the question without hesitation immediately there today.

"Inside your mind."

The answer shocked Harris.

His eyes widened slightly.

Because everything felt too real.

Too detailed.

Too alive.

The darkness moved strangely around them while countless unknown symbols appeared and vanished continuously nearby unexpectedly today.

Harris immediately focused upon the first figure.

The familiar voice.

The battlefield voice.

The voice that changed everything.

"You."

The figure smiled.

"Me."

Silence followed briefly.

Then Harris immediately asked the question troubling him most right now inside this strange realm.

"Who are you?"

The figure laughed softly.

Not mockingly.

Not arrogantly.

Simply knowingly.

The kind of laugh belonging to someone carrying countless secrets within himself over many centuries already.

Then finally—

He answered.

"I am the creator."

The darkness trembled.

Harris froze instantly.

The creator.

The word alone carried impossible weight.

His heart skipped.

His breathing stopped briefly.

Even the hidden figure seemed amused by his reaction today there quietly observing everything happening nearby.

"The creator of what?"

The figure stepped forward slowly.

Then pointed directly toward Harris.

Toward his soul.

Toward his destiny.

Toward everything.

"The Divine Suit."

Silence exploded.

For several moments Harris couldn't process the answer completely because it sounded utterly impossible and unbelievable today.

The creator.

The actual creator.

The one responsible for the Divine Suit.

The source.

The beginning.

The origin.

Everything connected directly back toward this mysterious figure standing before him now inside the darkness.

His mind raced.

Thousands of questions appeared immediately.

Thousands.

Because suddenly everything became possible.

Every mystery.

Every unanswered question.

Every hidden truth.

Everything.

The creator watched patiently.

He already knew exactly what Harris wanted asking right now.

"Then tell me."

Harris stepped forward immediately.

His voice carried urgency.

Desperation.

Hope.

"How do I control the suit completely?"

Another step.

"Why does it change my personality?"

Another step.

"Why did it obey me this time?"

Another step.

"What's happening to me?"

The questions poured endlessly.

The creator listened quietly.

Then smiled.

A calm smile.

A patient smile.

A dangerous smile.

Because before answering—

Another voice interrupted.

A different voice.

The third voice.

The hidden figure finally laughed.

A strange laugh.

An ancient laugh.

A terrifying laugh.

The darkness trembled again.

The creator sighed immediately.

Almost annoyed.

Almost amused.

"There he goes again."

Harris turned instantly.

The shadowed figure stepped forward slightly.

Still hidden.

Still impossible identifying.

Still mysterious.

The third voice looked directly toward Harris.

Then laughed again.

"You ask too many questions."

The statement irritated Harris immediately.

"Then answer one."

The third voice laughed harder.

The creator looked away.

Clearly accustomed to this behavior already over countless years previously there somewhere unknown.

Finally Harris crossed his arms.

"If he created the suit."

He pointed toward the creator.

"Then who are you?"

The darkness became silent.

The third voice stopped laughing briefly.

Then he answered.

"Someone watching."

Not helpful.

Not remotely helpful.

Harris immediately frowned.

The creator almost laughed.

The third voice enjoyed this reaction completely.

That much became obvious instantly.

Harris sighed heavily.

Then returned toward the original problem.

"The suit."

The creator nodded.

Finally.

Back to the important topic.

"The suit obeyed because something changed."

The answer immediately captured Harris' attention completely.

"What changed?"

The creator looked directly into his eyes.

Then answered calmly.

"You."

Silence followed.

Confusion followed.

Frustration followed.

Because that answer explained absolutely nothing.

The creator noticed immediately.

Then continued.

"For years you fought the suit."

The darkness around them displayed visions.

Past battles.

Past transformations.

Past struggles.

Everything.

"You feared it."

Another vision appeared.

"You resisted it."

Another vision appeared.

"You hated parts of it."

Another vision appeared.

"You never trusted it."

The final vision appeared.

Then vanished.

The creator folded his arms.

"But recently..."

His expression softened.

"You stopped fighting."

Harris remained silent.

Because part of him knew the creator spoke truthfully today regarding everything about the Divine Suit.

The creator continued.

"You finally accepted responsibility."

Another pause.

"You finally accepted yourself."

Another pause.

"And the suit noticed."

The statement felt important.

Very important.

The darkness shifted again.

Countless symbols illuminated around them.

Ancient symbols.

Unknown symbols.

Powerful symbols.

The creator pointed toward them.

"The Divine Suit isn't armor."

Harris looked confused.

"It never was."

The creator smiled.

Then revealed something shocking.

"The suit is alive."

Everything stopped.

The words echoed repeatedly.

Alive.

Alive.

Alive.

Harris stared.

Speechless.

Because suddenly years of strange behavior made sense.

The emotions.

The reactions.

The resistance.

Everything.

The suit wasn't equipment.

The suit wasn't technology.

The suit wasn't magic.

The suit was alive.

The realization changed everything.

Then immediately another question appeared.

"The Third Book."

The creator smiled.

A different smile.

A meaningful smile.

The moment Harris mentioned the book, something changed completely inside the darkness surrounding them immediately today.

The creator remained silent.

The third voice remained silent.

Both exchanged glances.

Both knew something.

Something important.

Something dangerous.

Harris noticed immediately.

"The Third Book."

He repeated firmly.

"What is it?"

The creator opened his mouth.

Before answering—

The third voice interrupted immediately.

"No."

Silence.

The creator sighed.

Again.

The third voice crossed his arms.

Then looked directly toward Harris.

"He isn't ready."

The statement irritated Harris instantly.

"I'm standing right here."

The third voice ignored him completely.

The creator rubbed his forehead tiredly.

Apparently this argument happened frequently.

Very frequently.

The third voice continued.

"I don't trust him."

The sentence shocked Harris.

The creator remained silent.

Meaning—

The statement mattered.

A lot.

"You don't trust me?"

The third voice nodded.

"Correct."

The response arrived instantly.

Brutally instantly.

Harris couldn't believe it.

"Why?"

The third voice laughed.

Then answered calmly.

"Because trust is earned."

Silence followed.

The darkness itself seemed waiting.

Watching.

Judging.

Then the third voice pointed somewhere beyond reality itself.

Far away.

Beyond darkness.

Beyond symbols.

Beyond everything.

A door appeared.

Massive.

Ancient.

Impossible.

Covered with countless glowing symbols continuously shifting across its surface endlessly before them now.

Harris froze.

The Secret Door.

His heart immediately recognized it.

Even without explanation.

Even without confirmation.

The third voice looked toward the door quietly.

Then back toward Harris.

"The answers are there."

Another pause.

"The Third Book is connected."

Another pause.

"The Divine Suit is connected."

Another pause.

"And so are you."

The words carried enormous weight.

The creator remained silent.

Allowing everything sinking in slowly.

Harris stared toward the door.

Unable looking away.

Because somehow—

Deep inside—

He knew.

His destiny waited there.

Behind that door.

Then suddenly—

Everything began collapsing.

The darkness shook violently.

The realm started breaking apart.

The creator looked disappointed.

"The hospital."

The third voice laughed again.

"Looks like he's waking up."

The creator stepped backward slowly.

Before disappearing completely.

He spoke one final sentence.

"Earn his trust."

The third voice pointed toward himself proudly.

Then laughed once more.

The darkness shattered.

Reality returned.

Hospital lights appeared.

Voices appeared.

The real world returned.

And immediately—

SLAP!

A hand connected directly against Harris' face.

Hard.

Very hard.

Painfully hard.

Harris blinked.

Confused.

Disoriented.

Then he saw her.

Harlina.

Standing directly beside the bed.

Tears visible.

Eyes red.

Anger visible.

Relief visible.

Everything visible.

"If you do that again."

Another glare.

"I won't feed you anymore."

Silence.

Harris stared.

Then smiled.

Immediately.

The smile destroyed her angry expression completely.

Not because she wanted forgiving him.

Because she was relieved.

Unbelievably relieved.

For two entire days she waited.

For two entire days she worried.

For two entire days she feared losing him.

Now he finally awakened.

And that mattered more than anger.

Much more.

A few minutes later Koji entered.

Followed by Lunar.

Both visibly relieved.

Both visibly exhausted.

Both visibly happy.

The family finally felt complete again.

Then Harris remembered something.

"The crystals."

Everyone blinked.

"The purple crystal."

"The violet crystal."

Koji looked confused immediately.

"What crystals?"

Lunar raised his hand calmly.

"I have them."

Everyone looked toward him.

Lunar explained everything carefully.

How the assassins transformed.

How the crystals appeared.

How he secured them safely afterward.

The moment Harris heard this—

He attempted standing.

Immediately.

A terrible decision.

A catastrophically terrible decision.

Because another slap arrived.

Even stronger.

Even harder.

Even more terrifying.

Harlina glared furiously.

"Sit down."

The command carried absolute authority.

The Void Walker.

Destroyer of enemies.

Bearer of the Divine Suit.

Conqueror of impossible battles.

Immediately surrendered.

Completely.

Without resistance.

Koji laughed.

Lunar laughed.

Harris accepted defeat.

Again.

Eventually Harlina fed him personally.

Refusing arguments.

Refusing negotiations.

Refusing compromise.

The recovery officially began.

Before Koji and Lunar left, Harris suddenly became serious again.

His eyes focused directly upon Lunar.

"Don't touch those crystals."

The room became silent.

Harris rarely sounded this serious.

"Keep them somewhere safe."

Lunar nodded immediately.

No questions.

No arguments.

The crystals were secured later inside a hidden locker beneath one of their most protected locations.

Far away.

Secret.

Secure.

Safe.

The evening arrived quietly while golden sunlight entered the hospital room through the window, painting everything warmly today.

Harris sat comfortably upon the bed while silently watching Harlina's face with a gentle smile appearing frequently.

Meanwhile Harlina continued watching Harris whenever he wasn't looking, immediately turning away whenever noticed by him.

Neither spoke much.

Neither needed words.

Simply seeing each other safely alive felt enough after everything that happened recently during those painful days.

The peaceful atmosphere remained beautiful.

The kind of peace warriors treasure after surviving battles capable destroying entire worlds and destinies forever.

Eventually night arrived.

The hospital became quieter.

The hallways became silent.

The lights dimmed softly.

This time Harlina remained determined.

Very determined.

She crossed her arms firmly.

"I'm not sleeping tonight."

Harris looked amused immediately.

"Oh?"

She nodded seriously.

"I'm watching you."

The statement sounded extremely suspicious.

Harris laughed quietly.

Harlina immediately pointed toward him.

"Don't laugh."

"I'm serious."

"You almost died."

The final sentence weakened her voice.

The fear remained.

Even now.

Even after he awakened.

The memory still hurt.

Harris' expression softened instantly.

Because he understood.

She wasn't being stubborn.

She was scared.

Very scared.

For two entire days she sat beside him.

For two entire days she feared losing him.

For two entire days she watched machines instead of hearing his voice.

The memory hurt both of them.

Slowly Harris extended one hand.

Then gently held hers.

"I'm okay."

She lowered her eyes.

"I know."

Another pause followed.

"But I'm still watching you."

Harris immediately realized arguing remained completely impossible tonight.

An unwinnable battle.

A legendary battle.

One nobody survived.

Several minutes later Harlina continued fighting sleep bravely while sitting beside the bed stubbornly and proudly there.

Then—

A yawn escaped.

She froze.

Harris smiled.

"No."

Another yawn escaped.

Her defeat approached rapidly.

"No."

Another.

Then another.

Then another.

The battle ended.

Sleep achieved complete victory.

Without warning Harris carefully lifted her into his arms.

"H-Harris!"

Instant embarrassment activated immediately.

Her face turned red.

Very red.

Legendary red.

The hospital room became slightly brighter somehow.

Harris carried her toward the bed carefully.

Then placed her comfortably beside him.

Before she could complain—

He gently kissed her cheek.

"Sleep."

The single word completely destroyed her remaining resistance.

Her face became even redder.

If possible.

Which somehow happened.

She immediately covered her face using both hands.

Harris laughed softly.

Meanwhile Harlina wished the universe would temporarily disappear for several minutes tonight completely and immediately.

Eventually she surrendered.

Sleep finally arrived.

Her face remained red.

Her heart remained fast.

Yet she smiled secretly.

A small smile.

A happy smile.

Moments later Harris wrapped one arm around her gently while pulling her closer protectively tonight there.

This time no fear existed.

No assassins existed.

No nightmares existed.

Only warmth.

Only comfort.

Only them.

The night passed peacefully.

For the first time in days.

Morning eventually arrived.

Unexpectedly Harris awakened first.

His condition improved slightly.

His injuries still existed.

But he felt stronger.

Beside him Harlina continued sleeping peacefully.

Harris smiled.

Then decided something dangerous.

Extremely dangerous.

He gently woke her.

"Harlina."

No response.

"Harlina."

Still no response.

Finally—

"Harlina."

She opened one eye suspiciously.

"What?"

Harris smiled innocently.

"Coffee."

Silence.

Complete silence.

Harlina stared directly at him.

Then narrowed her eyes.

Then narrowed them further.

Because she immediately understood.

He wasn't asking for coffee.

He was trying preventing another embarrassing feeding scene in front of Koji and Lunar again.

The realization struck instantly.

Her cheeks became red again.

"HARRIS!"

His laughter echoed throughout the room.

And for the first time since the attack—

A new day began with happiness instead of fear.

BY HARRIS RAVI

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 1 — THE DAY EVERYTHING CHANGED

Morning sunlight quietly entered the hospital room, painting golden colors across walls while announcing another peaceful beginning today.

For several beautiful moments, the world seemed completely free from danger, fear, pain, monsters, assassins, and prophecies.

Harris slowly opened his eyes, immediately finding Harlina sleeping beside him peacefully while holding his recovering hand gently.

A warm smile appeared naturally across his face because seeing her every morning remained his greatest happiness always.

After countless battles against impossible enemies, simple moments like this felt more precious than entire kingdoms ever.

Harris carefully observed her sleeping face, noticing tiny details he previously missed while constantly fighting overwhelming threats.

Her peaceful breathing reassured him greatly because every friend surviving remained a miracle after everything they endured.

For several minutes he simply watched her quietly, unwilling disturbing the rare peaceful moment surrounding them today.

Eventually Harlina slowly opened her eyes and immediately discovered Harris already staring at her lovingly there.

She became embarrassed instantly before pretending annoyance, though the happiness within her eyes remained impossible hiding.

"So, you're awake already," she said softly while trying unsuccessfully preventing her smile from appearing completely.

Harris laughed quietly before answering honestly.

"I woke earlier, but seeing you sleeping peacefully seemed more important than closing my eyes again."

Harlina's face immediately reddened.

She turned away quickly while attempting hiding embarrassment from someone understanding her expressions perfectly already.

"You're becoming shameless recently," she complained softly while secretly enjoying every word he just spoken.

Harris smiled warmly because hearing her voice every morning felt like proof destiny still showed mercy occasionally.

For several minutes they talked casually about nothing important, enjoying normal conversation without life-threatening emergencies interrupting constantly.

Outside, birds sang cheerfully while gentle winds carried fresh morning air through partially opened hospital windows nearby.

Everything appeared perfect.

Everything appeared peaceful.

Everything appeared safe.

Yet suddenly...

A strange feeling emerged deep within Harris's heart.

His smile slowly disappeared.

The warmth surrounding him suddenly felt distant.

The peaceful atmosphere somehow became unsettling.

Harlina noticed immediately.

Her expression changed from happiness toward concern after recognizing the unusual seriousness appearing across his face.

"What happened?" she asked softly.

Harris remained silent briefly.

He looked toward the window.

Then toward the sky.

Then toward distant clouds moving slowly beyond sight.

Finally he answered quietly.

"I don't know."

"But something feels wrong today."

"A very strange feeling."

"Like something terrible is waiting."

The room immediately became silent.

Harlina carefully listened because Harris's instincts rarely failed whenever danger approached unexpectedly from darkness somewhere.

Throughout countless battles, his unusual feelings often predicted disasters before anyone else noticed suspicious signs nearby.

Because of this...

She couldn't completely ignore his concern.

Still, she gently squeezed his hand reassuringly.

"We defeated impossible enemies before."

"We survived worse situations."

"Whatever happens today, we face it together."

Harris smiled slightly.

Her words always carried a unique power capable of calming storms raging inside his troubled heart.

Yet unfortunately...

The terrible feeling remained.

Not weaker.

Not smaller.

Stronger.

Much stronger.

Almost as if destiny itself watched silently while preparing another cruel test specifically designed for him.

Trying changing the mood, Harlina stood happily before gathering belongings scattered around nearby chairs casually.

"I'm going home briefly."

"I need refreshing properly."

"And somebody needs preparing actual food because hospital meals remain criminally terrible."

Harris laughed immediately.

Even during serious situations, Harlina always found ways creating warmth around everyone nearby effortlessly somehow.

Before leaving, she approached his bed carefully.

Then unexpectedly placed a gentle kiss upon his forehead.

For several seconds Harris completely froze.

His brain stopped functioning.

His heart forgot beating normally.

Meanwhile Harlina simply laughed mischievously after witnessing his priceless reaction immediately following her surprise attack.

"See you soon."

She waved cheerfully.

Then disappeared beyond the doorway.

The room suddenly felt much emptier.

Much quieter.

Much lonelier.

Soon afterward another familiar group arrived.

Koji.

Lunar.

Several others.

Their presence immediately brightened the atmosphere because Harris considered them family rather than simple companions anymore.

Koji discussed investigation plans regarding remaining Omega Crystal fragments hidden throughout distant regions worldwide currently.

Lunar confidently promised discovering important clues before future enemies gained opportunities threatening innocent lives again anywhere.

The conversation continued comfortably.

Everyone seemed optimistic.

Everyone seemed determined.

Everyone seemed ready confronting whatever dangers waited ahead.

Yet Harris still couldn't shake the feeling haunting him continuously since awakening earlier that morning today.

Eventually investigation duties called.

Koji and Lunar prepared leaving.

Before departing, Koji placed one hand firmly upon Harris's shoulder supportively.

"Recover completely first."

"We'll handle investigations."

"No heroics."

"No unnecessary risks."

Harris laughed softly.

"You sound exactly like an old grandfather."

Lunar immediately laughed loudly.

Koji pretended offense.

The room briefly filled with joyful energy once more.

Then they left.

The door closed.

Silence returned.

Now...

Harris sat completely alone.

Minutes passed slowly.

The clock continued ticking steadily.

The hospital remained unusually quiet.

Too quiet.

Almost unnaturally quiet.

Harris stared toward the ceiling thoughtfully while countless possibilities crossed his mind continuously without answers appearing anywhere.

The terrible feeling still remained.

Stronger now.

Much stronger.

Suddenly...

Footsteps echoed through the hallway.

Slow.

Heavy.

Unusual.

A doctor entered the room.

Immediately Harris noticed something strange.

The doctor looked familiar.

Yet different somehow.

His eyes seemed empty.

His expression lacked emotion.

His movements appeared mechanical.

Almost artificial.

The doctor approached calmly before stopping directly beside Harris's bed silently without greeting first whatsoever.

Then he spoke.

"You must leave immediately."

Harris blinked.

For several moments he genuinely believed he misheard those unexpected words entirely due confusion perhaps.

"Sorry?"

The doctor repeated himself.

"You are discharged."

"Leave now."

Harris stared silently.

His injuries remained severe.

Walking still caused pain.

Recovery required additional time.

Every medical professional previously agreed completely.

Yet suddenly...

Everything changed.

"Doctor, I'm still recovering."

The doctor's expression never changed.

"Leave."

Harris frowned.

"This doesn't make sense."

"Yesterday everyone said additional treatment remained necessary."

The doctor responded instantly.

"No longer necessary."

"Leave now."

No concern.

No explanation.

No sympathy.

Nothing.

The conversation felt wrong.

Everything about this situation felt wrong.

Yet arguing accomplished nothing.

Slowly Harris stood.

Pain immediately exploded throughout his body.

His legs trembled.

His wounds burned intensely.

His breathing became heavier.

Still…

He remained standing.

The doctor simply watched silently.

Not helping.

Not caring.

Not reacting.

For the first time…

Fear touched Harris's heart.

Not fear from enemies.

Not fear from death.

Fear that something invisible already started moving against him.

After gathering belongings carefully, he exited the hospital completely alone.

The morning sunlight greeted him.

Yet somehow...

It felt cold.

Very cold.

He began walking home slowly.

Each step hurt.

Each breath reminded him his body remained far from fully recovered physically.

Still he continued forward.

Because home waited.

Friends waited.

Harlina waited.

Everything would make sense soon.

At least...

That's what he believed.

Then...

Far ahead...

He noticed somebody familiar.

Jekuna.

Relief instantly flooded through Harris.

Finally.

A familiar face.

A friend.

Someone capable explaining today's strange events perhaps.

Harris raised his hand happily.

Despite pain, he smiled brightly.

Then called loudly.

"Jekuna!"

The figure stopped.

Slowly turned around.

Looked directly toward Harris.

For one hopeful moment...

Everything seemed normal.

Then Jekuna's expression changed completely.

No recognition.

No warmth.

No friendship.

Only hostility.

Only anger.

Only hatred.

Harris felt his heartbeat stop momentarily.

Confusion overwhelmed him immediately.

Still believing this misunderstanding somehow, he forced another smile despite growing uneasiness inside himself rapidly.

"Hey!"

"What's wrong?"

Jekuna suddenly walked toward him.

Fast.

Purposeful.

Dangerous.

Harris opened his mouth again.

Before any words emerged...

Jekuna's fist slammed violently into his stomach.

The impact exploded through every wound.

Pain consumed everything.

Blood reached Harris's lips instantly.

His weakened body collapsed onto the street immediately unable resisting the overwhelming force successfully.

The world spun.

His vision blurred.

His breathing nearly stopped.

Above him...

Jekuna stared coldly.

Like staring at a stranger.

Like staring at an enemy.

Then spoke words destroying Harris's heart completely.

"Don't ever talk to me again."

Harris froze.

The pain from the punch meant nothing now.

Because something far worse happened.

His friend...

Didn't recognize him.

And deep inside...

The terrible feeling finally whispered one horrifying truth.

Today...

Was only the beginning.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 2... 💔🔵⚔️

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 2 — THE WORLD THAT FORGOT HIM

Harris remained motionless upon the cold ground while Jekuna walked away casually, leaving confusion and heartbreak behind.

For several moments he couldn't even process what happened because reality suddenly felt completely detached from everything familiar.

The physical pain certainly hurt badly, yet the emotional wound cut deeper than any enemy attack previously experienced.

Jekuna never attacked him before.

Not once.

Not during arguments.

Not during training.

Not even during their most difficult disagreements together throughout countless dangerous adventures previously shared.

Yet today...

Jekuna looked directly into his eyes and treated him like a complete stranger without hesitation whatsoever.

Harris slowly pushed himself upright despite injuries screaming violently throughout his recovering body with every painful movement.

His hands trembled.

His breathing remained unstable.

His heart felt strangely hollow.

Still refusing acceptance, Harris convinced himself some misunderstanding must explain Jekuna's impossible behavior earlier somehow today.

Maybe stress.

Maybe exhaustion.

Maybe another problem.

Anything except the terrifying possibility growing quietly within his increasingly troubled mind already.

Determined discovering answers quickly, Harris continued walking despite overwhelming pain threatening collapse with nearly every step taken.

His destination remained obvious.

Harlina's house.

If anybody understood today's strange events, surely Harlina would explain everything immediately without confusion or conflict.

That thought alone provided enough strength continuing forward despite worsening physical condition and emotional instability inside himself.

The streets appeared unusually normal.

People talked.

Children played.

Shops remained open.

Everything looked exactly the same.

Everything except Harris's rapidly breaking world.

Eventually he reached Harlina's house.

Seeing the familiar home immediately brought comfort because countless precious memories existed within those welcoming walls there.

Moments of laughter.

Moments of sadness.

Moments of healing.

Moments only possible because Harlina always remained beside him faithfully through everything before.

A weak smile appeared.

Finally.

Something familiar.

Something safe.

Something real.

Slowly he approached the entrance before opening the door carefully, already imagining her reaction upon seeing him unexpectedly.

Perhaps she would laugh.

Perhaps she would scold him.

Perhaps she would immediately notice something wrong.

Anything would be better than today's growing nightmare currently surrounding him from every direction imaginable.

"Harlina!"

His voice echoed throughout the house.

Several seconds later footsteps approached quickly.

Relief flooded his heart.

Then Harlina appeared.

For one beautiful second...

Everything seemed normal.

Then she slapped him.

The impact stunned him completely.

His face turned sideways instantly.

Pain spread across his cheek.

Yet once again...

The emotional damage surpassed physical pain entirely.

Harris stared silently.

Unable understanding.

Unable speaking.

Unable breathing properly.

Harlina glared at him.

Not joking.

Not smiling.

Not pretending.

Genuinely angry.

Genuinely suspicious.

Genuinely hostile.

"Who are you?"

The question struck harder than Jekuna's punch.

His heart shattered further.

"Harlina..."

She interrupted immediately.

"Why are you inside my house?"

Harris laughed weakly.

Surely this joke already went too far.

Surely she planned revealing the truth soon.

Surely...

Surely...

Nothing made sense anymore.

"Stop acting."

"It's me."

"It's Harris."

Another slap.

Harder.

Much harder.

This time tears instantly formed within his eyes.

Not because of pain.

Because of disbelief.

Because of heartbreak.

Because somebody precious suddenly looked at him like a dangerous intruder invading her home unexpectedly today.

"Leave immediately."

Her voice contained absolutely no recognition.

No affection.

No warmth.

Nothing.

Only rejection.

Pure rejection.

The same girl who once risked everything protecting him now demanded he disappear from existence immediately today.

Harris took one step backward.

Then another.

Then another.

His legs felt weak.

His vision blurred.

His chest hurt terribly.

Not from injuries.

From heartbreak.

He wanted screaming.

Wanted asking questions.

Wanted begging her remember.

Yet no words emerged.

Only silence.

Painful silence.

Finally he turned away slowly.

Then walked.

No destination.

No answers.

Only pain.

Tears quietly escaped despite desperate attempts controlling them before anybody noticed his complete emotional collapse happening now.

The streets became blurry.

The world became distant.

His thoughts became chaotic.

Every memory involving Harlina replayed endlessly inside his mind while reality cruelly destroyed each precious recollection mercilessly.

Still...

One hope remained.

Koji.

Lunar.

They would understand.

They had to understand.

Otherwise...

Otherwise...

Harris couldn't even finish that terrifying thought.

Eventually he reached Koji's house.

Outside stood Koji and Lunar together discussing investigation results regarding Omega Crystal fragments discovered recently elsewhere.

Relief returned immediately.

Finally.

Two people.

Two trusted companions.

Two individuals impossible manipulating so easily.

Harris gathered remaining strength before calling loudly.

"Master!"

"Koji!"

"Lunar!"

Both turned.

Saw him.

Then immediately entered combat stances.

Harris froze.

The world stopped.

His heart stopped.

Everything stopped.

For several seconds nobody moved.

Nobody spoke.

Nobody breathed.

Then Koji drew his weapon.

Lunar prepared attacking.

Harris stared in complete horror.

His own master.

The man who trained him.

Guided him.

Protected him.

Believed in him.

Now looked ready killing him.

"Master..."

The word barely escaped.

Koji's response shattered another piece of Harris's soul forever.

"Stay away from us."

The voice contained no recognition.

No familiarity.

Nothing.

Only hostility.

Only distrust.

Only rejection.

Lunar stepped forward aggressively.

"Don't come closer."

Harris felt something breaking inside himself completely.

Not physically.

Emotionally.

Spiritually.

Deep within his heart.

This nightmare kept growing worse.

And worse.

And worse.

Still...

He couldn't give up.

Not yet.

There had to be an explanation.

There had to be a cure.

There had to be hope.

Right?

Yet while staring into their unfamiliar eyes...

For the first time today...

Harris genuinely began fearing the answer.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 3... 💔🔵⚔️📖

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 3 — THE LONELIEST MAN ALIVE

Harris stood frozen between Koji and Lunar while the last remaining pieces of his heart slowly crumbled away.

Every instinct screamed that something impossible had happened, yet reality continued proving the nightmare horrifyingly genuine today.

The same people who once called him family now looked upon him with suspicion, hostility, and complete unfamiliarity.

For several painful moments Harris simply stared silently, hoping somebody would suddenly remember everything and stop pretending.

Nobody did.

Not Koji.

Not Lunar.

Not anyone.

The silence itself became a weapon cutting deeper than blades ever could throughout his already shattered emotions.

Koji tightened his grip upon his weapon cautiously while continuing watching Harris like a dangerous criminal nearby.

Lunar stepped slightly forward protectively, placing himself between Koji and the supposed threat standing before them.

Harris couldn't believe what he witnessed.

The people he protected repeatedly now felt compelled protecting themselves from him instead today somehow.

The irony hurt more than any wound.

His voice trembled slightly.

"Master..."

Koji's expression remained unchanged.

"I told you not to come closer."

Those words echoed endlessly inside Harris's mind.

Not because they were cruel.

Because they were spoken by Koji.

That alone felt impossible.

Harris remembered countless training sessions beneath sunrise skies where Koji patiently taught him discipline and responsibility.

He remembered every lesson.

Every correction.

Every encouragement.

Every moment helping transform him into somebody capable protecting others despite overwhelming adversity everywhere.

Now all those memories existed only within Harris's mind.

For Koji...

They apparently never happened.

A sharp pain struck Harris's chest suddenly.

Not from injuries.

Not from exhaustion.

Not from previous battles.

This pain originated somewhere deeper.

Far deeper.

The place where memories lived.

The place where love lived.

The place where family lived.

And that place was breaking apart.

Slowly.

Painfully.

Mercilessly.

Lunar suddenly moved first.

His weapon appeared instantly.

His stance became aggressive.

His eyes contained absolutely no recognition whatsoever.

Only caution.

Only distrust.

Only readiness.

The sight devastated Harris.

Lunar once admired him.

Trusted him.

Followed him into impossible situations repeatedly without hesitation.

Yet now...

Nothing remained.

Harris lowered his head.

His voice became almost inaudible.

"What happened to all of you?"

Neither answered.

Neither understood the question.

Neither even recognized the person asking.

The realization nearly destroyed him.

Harris slowly stepped backward.

Then another step.

Then another.

Neither pursued him.

Neither stopped him.

Neither cared.

Eventually he turned around completely.

Then walked away.

Alone.

Utterly alone.

The world suddenly felt enormous.

And Harris felt incredibly small within it.

The streets stretched endlessly ahead.

Crowds moved around him.

Voices filled the air.

Yet none of it mattered.

Because despite standing among thousands of people...

He had never felt this lonely before.

Not during childhood.

Not during battles.

Not during near-death experiences.

Not even during moments confronting absolute despair previously.

This loneliness surpassed everything.

Because everybody still existed.

Yet nobody remembered him.

The cruelest kind of isolation imaginable.

Eventually his exhausted legs carried him toward the throne.

The throne.

The place where countless victories began.

The place where countless plans formed.

The place where he usually found clarity whenever confusion threatened overwhelming him entirely.

Today…

Even the throne felt different.

Empty.

Cold.

Silent.

Harris slowly sat down.

Pain shot through every injury immediately.

Still he ignored it.

Physical suffering no longer mattered.

Compared with today's emotional destruction, broken bones felt insignificant now.

For several minutes he remained motionless.

Thinking.

Remembering.

Hurting.

Trying desperately understanding what happened.

Why did Jekuna attack him?

Why did Harlina reject him?

Why did Koji and Lunar forget him?

Why did everybody suddenly become strangers?

Why?

Why?

Why?

The questions repeated endlessly.

Yet answers never arrived.

Until...

A voice suddenly echoed within his mind.

Not around him.

Not beside him.

Inside him.

Deep inside.

The voice sounded distant.

Ancient.

Mysterious.

Almost like somebody speaking through endless darkness.

"They are controlled."

Harris immediately stood despite pain.

His eyes widened.

His heart raced.

Finally.

An answer.

"Who said that?"

No response.

Only silence.

"Please answer!"

Nothing.

Then several moments later...

The voice returned.

"They are controlled by an Omega Crystal."

Harris froze completely.

The words struck him like lightning.

Omega Crystal.

Immediately everything connected.

The strange doctor.

Jekuna's hostility.

Harlina's rejection.

Koji's aggression.

Lunar's distrust.

Everything.

Everything suddenly made sense.

A remaining Omega Crystal.

The Blue Crystal.

Mind Control.

The realization horrified him.

His friends weren't betraying him.

They weren't abandoning him.

They weren't choosing this.

They were victims.

Victims exactly like countless civilians previously manipulated by evil forces before.

Relief appeared briefly.

Then vanished instantly.

Because another question remained.

How could he save them?

"Tell me!"

"How do I cure them?"

His voice echoed loudly across the throne room desperately.

No answer came.

The mysterious voice disappeared completely.

Leaving only silence once again.

Harris clenched his fists tightly.

His entire body trembled.

Not from fear.

Not from pain.

From frustration.

From helplessness.

From desperation.

He finally understood the problem.

Yet still possessed absolutely no solution.

The situation felt unbearable.

For the first time since morning…

Tears escaped freely.

No restraint.

No hiding.

No pretending strength.

Just pain.

Raw pain.

Pure pain.

The kind of pain only somebody losing everybody simultaneously could truly understand completely.

Harris buried his face within trembling hands.

Then cried.

Not loudly.

Not dramatically.

Quietly.

Brokenly.

Like somebody trying desperately holding together pieces already shattered beyond repair completely.

The throne room remained silent.

Nobody comforted him.

Nobody reassured him.

Nobody stood beside him.

Because everybody forgot.

Everybody.

Even now...

Somewhere nearby...

Harlina probably viewed him as a stranger.

Koji probably viewed him as a threat.

Lunar probably viewed him as an enemy.

And that reality hurt beyond words.

Eventually Harris wiped away tears slowly.

His eyes remained red.

His voice remained weak.

His heart remained broken.

Yet something else remained.

Hope.

Small.

Fragile.

But alive.

Because if mind control caused this nightmare...

Then his friends still existed underneath.

The real Harlina.

The real Koji.

The real Lunar.

The real Jekuna.

They were still there.

Waiting.

Trapped.

And Harris refused abandoning them.

No matter how much suffering awaited him.

No matter how much pain he endured.

No matter how completely alone he became.

He would save them.

Every single one.

Even if the entire world stood against him.

Slowly Harris removed several bandages covering his injuries.

Pain immediately intensified.

Still he ignored it completely.

Then he raised one trembling hand.

Void energy gathered.

The Divine Suit began activating gradually around his weakened body.

A familiar presence returned.

The one companion never abandoning him before.

The one existence always answering.

Always protecting.

Always understanding.

His suit.

A faint smile appeared.

"At least you're still here."

The suit remained silent.

No response.

No voice.

Nothing.

The smile disappeared instantly.

For several seconds Harris simply stared at the incomplete armor surrounding his body quietly without moving.

Then...

Despite everything...

Despite the loneliness...

Despite the heartbreak...

Despite the silence...

He smiled again.

A painful smile.

A broken smile.

And whispered softly.

"You too?"

The throne room became silent once more.

And for the first time in his life...

Void Walker truly felt alone.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 4... 💔🔵⚔️👑

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 4 — THE MAN EVERYONE CHOSE OVER HIM

The silence following the suit's refusal felt heavier than mountains resting directly upon Harris's exhausted shattered soul.

For years the Divine Suit remained beside him through impossible battles, sacrifices, victories, failures, despair, and suffering alike.

Even when humanity doubted him.

Even when enemies surrounded him.

Even when death itself reached toward him repeatedly.

The suit always answered.

Today...

Nothing.

Not a single response.

Not a single reassurance.

Not a single sign.

Harris lowered his head slowly.

Then laughed.

A small laugh.

A broken laugh.

A lonely laugh.

The kind of laughter born when pain exceeds the body's ability processing emotions normally anymore completely.

"So even you are ignoring me today."

His voice echoed softly throughout the throne room.

No answer came.

The silence remained undefeated.

For several moments Harris simply stood motionless while staring toward the distant horizon beyond the throne itself.

Then something changed.

A small realization.

A simple truth.

If nobody could help him…

Then he would help himself.

If nobody remembered him…

Then he would remember them.

If everybody stood against him…

Then he would still protect them.

Because that was what Harris always did.

Slowly he tightened his fists.

His eyes hardened.

His breathing stabilized.

His heart remained broken.

But determination returned.

Not strength.

Not confidence.

Determination.

The strongest weapon he possessed.

Even stronger than Void Energy itself.

Harris stepped forward.

Then another step.

Then another.

Eventually reaching the center of the throne platform overlooking the entire kingdom surrounding him below.

The wind blew strongly.

His damaged clothes moved gently.

The remaining bandages fluttered quietly.

Yet his gaze never moved.

Somewhere nearby...

The Blue Omega Crystal user existed.

Somewhere nearby...

The person responsible for today's nightmare watched everything unfold happily from shadows hidden carefully beyond sight.

And Harris intended finding them.

No matter the cost.

Slowly Void Energy gathered around him.

Dark energy danced across the air like countless stars consumed by endless darkness itself silently nearby.

His injuries protested immediately.

Pain spread everywhere.

Blood reopened beneath damaged bandages.

Still Harris continued.

He ignored everything.

Because saving his friends mattered more than preserving his own body currently anymore.

The Void Energy expanded further.

His senses stretched across cities.

Across forests.

Across mountains.

Across rivers.

Searching.

Searching endlessly.

Searching desperately.

For hours.

The process consumed enormous energy.

The process exhausted him completely.

The process nearly caused collapse repeatedly.

Still he refused stopping.

Because every second meant another second his friends remained trapped inside mind-controlled nightmares unwillingly.

Eventually sunset approached.

Golden light painted the horizon beautifully.

Yet Harris never noticed.

His entire focus remained searching.

Searching.

Searching.

Then suddenly...

A disturbance appeared.

Small.

Almost invisible.

Yet unmistakable.

Harris's eyes widened instantly.

There.

Somewhere beyond the city.

Near his friends.

Near Harlina.

Near Koji.

Near Lunar.

Near everyone.

Something existed.

Something wrong.

Something pretending.

Something hiding.

A faint presence.

A familiar presence.

A horrifying presence.

Harris immediately recognized it.

The Omega Crystal.

The Blue Omega Crystal.

Relief and fear collided simultaneously within his heart.

Relief because he finally located the enemy.

Fear because his friends remained dangerously close.

Without hesitation Harris launched forward immediately.

Void Energy propelled him through the air rapidly despite injuries threatening complete bodily failure already.

The journey felt endless.

His body weakened further.

His vision blurred repeatedly.

Still he continued moving.

Because every second mattered now.

Finally…

He arrived.

Then froze completely.

The sight before him shattered reality once again.

His friends stood together happily.

Harlina.

Koji.

Lunar.

Jekuna.

Everyone.

Smiling.

Laughing.

Talking.

Living normally.

As though nothing happened.

As though today never existed.

As though Harris never existed.

At first confusion filled him.

Then...

He saw him.

Standing among them.

Laughing beside them.

Speaking with them.

Accepted by them.

Loved by them.

A man wearing Harris's face.

The world stopped.

Harris couldn't breathe.

Couldn't think.

Couldn't move.

Because standing among his family...

Was another Harris.

The fake Harris smiled warmly while everyone surrounded him affectionately without suspicion or fear anywhere nearby.

Harlina laughed beside him.

Koji placed one hand proudly upon his shoulder.

Lunar smiled brightly.

Jekuna joked comfortably.

Everything looked normal.

Everything looked happy.

Everything looked perfect.

Except...

The real Harris stood alone watching.

Nobody noticed him.

Nobody searched for him.

Nobody remembered him.

The fake Harris possessed everything.

His face.

His identity.

His place.

His family.

His life.

Harris felt something inside him break permanently.

A wound deeper than anything experienced before.

The enemy didn't merely control minds.

The enemy stole existence itself.

The realization hurt beyond imagination.

For several moments Harris simply watched silently.

Unable accepting reality completely.

Then the fake Harris looked directly toward him.

And smiled.

A smug smile.

A victorious smile.

A cruel smile.

The smile of somebody knowing exactly how much damage they caused successfully.

The smile alone ignited rage.

Yet Harris controlled himself immediately.

Because his friends stood nearby.

Because harming them remained unacceptable.

Because saving them mattered more than revenge.

Slowly he stepped forward.

"Harlina."

No response.

"Harlina."

This time everyone turned.

Every eye landed upon him.

For one hopeful second Harris prayed.

Prayed somebody remembered.

Prayed somebody recognized him.

Prayed somebody noticed the truth.

Instead...

Harlina moved closer toward the fake Harris protectively.

As though defending somebody precious from danger.

From him.

The real Harris.

His heart shattered further.

Koji stepped forward immediately.

His weapon appeared.

Lunar prepared attacking.

Jekuna clenched his fists.

Everyone positioned themselves between the fake Harris and the real Harris protectively.

The enemy smiled wider.

The sight almost destroyed him.

Then the fake Harris spoke.

"Everyone."

"I don't know this man."

The words hit harder than death.

Everyone instantly believed him.

No hesitation.

No doubt.

No questions.

Because mind control erased every memory connecting them with the real Harris completely already.

Suddenly Jekuna attacked first.

His fist struck Harris's injured body violently.

Pain exploded everywhere.

Before recovering...

Lunar attacked.

Then Koji.

Then others.

The battlefield became chaos.

Yet Harris never counterattacked.

Not once.

Not even once.

Because these weren't enemies.

These were family.

Every strike broke bones.

Every attack reopened wounds.

Every impact pushed him closer toward death itself mercilessly.

Still…

He refused fighting back.

Even while bleeding.

Even while collapsing.

Even while dying.

Because protecting them remained more important than protecting himself.

The fake Harris watched everything happily.

Watching his family destroy him.

Watching his life disappear.

Watching hope fade.

And smiling.

Always smiling.

Eventually Harris fell onto one knee.

Blood covered the ground beneath him.

His vision darkened gradually.

His body approached complete failure.

Yet he still refused attacking.

Because somewhere inside those controlled minds…

His friends still existed.

And he would never hurt them.

Not even to save himself.

The fake Harris laughed quietly.

The sound echoed endlessly.

And for the first time today...

Death felt very close.

Very close indeed.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 5... 💔🔵⚔️🔥

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 5 — THE LAST THING HE SAW

Harris remained kneeling upon the blood-covered ground while every person he loved continued attacking mercilessly without hesitation today.

The pain no longer came from broken bones.

The pain no longer came from reopened wounds.

The pain no longer came from approaching death.

The pain came from watching familiar faces hurting him while believing they protected somebody else instead completely.

Every strike carried memories.

Every strike carried heartbreak.

Every strike carried another piece of his soul away permanently into darkness beyond recovery.

Jekuna attacked again.

The same friend who once trusted him with his life now punched him repeatedly without recognition remaining.

Each impact forced Harris backward.

Each impact weakened him further.

Yet he never raised his fists.

Not once.

Because Jekuna remained family.

Even now.

Even like this.

Even while destroying him unknowingly.

Lunar followed next.

His attacks came faster.

Sharper.

More precise.

Years of training transformed Lunar into a formidable fighter capable threatening even elite warriors successfully now.

Normally Harris would dodge effortlessly.

Normally Harris would counter instantly.

Normally Harris would stop the fight immediately.

Today…

He accepted every attack.

Because hurting Lunar remained impossible.

No matter the circumstances.

No matter the consequences.

No matter how much suffering resulted.

Then Koji moved.

The moment Harris saw his master preparing an attack, something inside him broke completely beyond repair forever.

Koji.

His teacher.

His guide.

His protector.

The man who helped shape his entire journey.

The man he respected beyond words.

Now raising a weapon against him.

The sight hurt more than death itself.

"Harris would understand."

The thought appeared suddenly.

And somehow...

That made everything worse.

Koji attacked.

The strike landed directly across Harris's already damaged body.

A horrible sound echoed.

Several bones cracked instantly.

Blood escaped his mouth immediately.

His weakened body crashed violently across the ground before stopping several meters away finally.

Still...

He never attacked back.

Not once.

The fake Harris watched quietly nearby.

Smiling.

Always smiling.

Every moment.

Every attack.

Every injury.

The smile never disappeared.

Because this was exactly what the enemy wanted.

Not victory.

Not domination.

Not destruction.

Suffering.

Pure suffering.

The Blue Omega Crystal wanted Harris broken emotionally before killing him physically completely forever.

And unfortunately...

The plan worked.

For the first time in years...

Harris felt hopeless.

Not weak.

Not afraid.

Hopeless.

A feeling far more dangerous.

A feeling capable destroying even heroes eventually if allowed growing unchecked continuously inside vulnerable hearts.

Another attack landed.

Then another.

Then another.

The world became pain.

His body stopped responding properly.

His vision blurred constantly.

His hearing faded gradually.

Yet one thing remained perfectly clear.

The fake Harris.

Standing beside Harlina.

Holding her hand.

Smiling.

Living his life.

That image burned into his mind endlessly.

Harlina even smiled back.

Not because she betrayed him.

Because she genuinely believed the fake Harris was real.

That realization hurt beyond imagination.

The girl who loved him most no longer remembered his existence whatsoever.

Eventually Harris collapsed completely.

His body refused standing.

His arms refused moving.

His legs refused responding.

Everything hurt.

Everything burned.

Everything failed.

The attacks finally stopped.

Not because mercy appeared.

Because there was nothing left attacking.

Harris already looked dead.

Blood surrounded him.

His breathing weakened dangerously.

His heartbeat slowed significantly.

The fake Harris approached slowly.

Step.

Step.

Step.

Then stopped directly before him.

Looking down.

Smiling.

Victorious.

Satisfied.

Harris struggled raising his head.

The effort alone felt impossible.

Still he managed.

Their eyes met.

Finally.

The enemy spoke.

"You lost."

The voice sounded calm.

Mocking.

Cruel.

Enjoying every second.

Harris remained silent.

Not because he lacked answers.

Because speaking required strength he no longer possessed currently anymore.

The fake Harris crouched beside him.

Then whispered softly.

"They chose me."

Those three words struck harder than every attack combined previously throughout the entire horrifying day already.

Because somewhere deep inside…

A small wounded part of Harris actually feared those words were true.

The fake Harris continued smiling.

"Look around."

Slowly Harris obeyed.

Harlina stood beside the enemy.

Koji stood beside the enemy.

Lunar stood beside the enemy.

Everyone stood beside the enemy.

Nobody stood beside him.

The sight nearly destroyed his remaining will completely.

His eyes slowly closed.

Not intentionally.

His body simply lacked energy continuing anymore.

Everything felt distant.

Everything felt cold.

Everything felt quiet.

Maybe this was the end.

Maybe this was where Void Walker finally died.

Not fighting monsters.

Not fighting gods.

Not fighting destiny.

But dying alone.

Forgotten.

Rejected.

Broken.

The thought strangely brought peace.

At least the suffering would stop.

At least his friends remained alive.

At least nobody else needed getting hurt.

Then…

A voice appeared.

Different.

Familiar.

Ancient.

Powerful.

The same voice he heard earlier.

Yet much louder now.

Much closer now.

Almost angry.

"ACTIVATE BEAST MODE."

The command exploded throughout his consciousness like thunder shaking entire worlds apart instantly beyond imagination itself.

Harris tried responding.

Tried moving.

Tried understanding.

But darkness already consumed everything rapidly.

His vision vanished completely.

His hearing disappeared.

His thoughts faded.

His consciousness collapsed.

And for the first time since beginning this nightmare...

Harris lost awareness completely.

The real Harris disappeared into darkness.

Yet something else awakened.

Something ancient.

Something terrifying.

Something that never tolerated threats against the Void Walker.

Far away...

Deep within the Divine Suit...

A hidden protocol finally activated.

And the fake Harris's smile slowly disappeared.

For the first time today...

The enemy felt fear.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 6... 🔵⚔️👑🔥💔

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 6 — THE SMILE THAT TERRIFIED EVIL

The fake Harris stepped backward suddenly because a terrifying laughter echoed across the battlefield despite the real Harris remaining unconscious.

Everyone froze immediately.

The sound didn't belong to Harris.

The sound didn't belong to any human.

The sound felt ancient.

Predatory.

Absolute.

A deep smile slowly appeared beneath the damaged Divine Suit while Harris's unconscious body remained motionless upon blood-covered ground.

Then the smile widened.

Wider.

Wider.

Wider.

Until even the fake Harris felt fear crawling throughout his entire body uncontrollably for the first time today.

The battlefield became silent.

Nobody understood what happened.

Nobody understood why the unconscious Harris suddenly started laughing despite standing at death's door already.

Then...

The Divine Suit moved.

Not Harris.

The Suit.

Slowly Harris's broken body rose from the ground despite shattered bones and catastrophic injuries covering him completely.

Every movement looked unnatural.

Every movement looked impossible.

Every movement looked terrifying.

The controlled friends immediately stepped backward instinctively.

Something felt wrong.

Very wrong.

The fake Harris narrowed his eyes nervously.

"What are you?"

The smile grew larger.

Then finally...

The Divine Suit answered.

Its voice echoed across the battlefield like countless voids speaking simultaneously through endless darkness beyond existence itself.

"You used the wrong trick."

The fake Harris froze.

The Suit slowly looked toward everyone.

Toward Harlina.

Toward Koji.

Toward Lunar.

Toward Jekuna.

Toward every controlled victim standing there unknowingly.

Then looked back toward the enemy.

A second smile appeared.

Even colder.

Even scarier.

"You cannot kill Void Walker through his heart."

The enemy immediately attacked.

Fear forced him moving first.

Several blue energy attacks rushed forward violently attempting destroying Harris's body before anything worse happened unexpectedly.

The attacks landed directly.

Explosions erupted everywhere.

Dust covered the battlefield.

The controlled friends gasped.

The enemy smiled briefly.

Then...

A single glowing red eye appeared through the dust.

The smile remained.

Untouched.

Unharmed.

Watching.

Waiting.

Judging.

The enemy's confidence shattered instantly.

The Divine Suit slowly walked forward.

Step.

Step.

Step.

Every step released Void Energy powerful enough shaking the surrounding landscape beneath everybody's feet violently today.

The controlled friends attempted attacking again.

Not willingly.

Only because mind control forced them.

The Suit immediately raised one hand.

Void Energy erupted.

Thousands of dark chains appeared instantly throughout the battlefield before surrounding every controlled friend carefully without harming them.

Within seconds…

Harlina stopped moving.

Koji stopped moving.

Lunar stopped moving.

Jekuna stopped moving.

Everyone became safely restrained.

Not injured.

Not harmed.

Only protected.

The Suit looked toward them briefly.

Its voice softened slightly.

"Sleep."

The chains glowed gently.

The controlled friends immediately lost consciousness peacefully without suffering further injuries or emotional damage during battle.

Now only two remained standing.

The enemy.

And the Suit.

The fake Harris attempted maintaining confidence.

Attempted maintaining composure.

Attempted maintaining control.

Yet fear became impossible hiding now.

Because standing before him wasn't Harris.

This was something older.

Something deeper.

Something existing beyond ordinary understanding entirely.

The enemy laughed nervously.

"You think one transformation changes anything?"

The Suit smiled.

Then continued walking.

The enemy attacked again.

Blue energy storms exploded everywhere.

Illusions covered reality.

Thousands of fake worlds appeared simultaneously attempting trapping the Suit within endless mental prisons forever.

The battlefield vanished.

The sky vanished.

Reality vanished.

Only illusions remained.

The Blue Omega Crystal's greatest power.

Mind Domination.

The enemy smiled confidently again.

Nobody escaped this technique before.

Nobody.

Not even legendary warriors.

Yet inside the illusion…

The Suit stood perfectly still.

Unmoved.

Unaffected.

Watching.

Waiting.

Then it spoke one sentence.

A sentence that shattered every illusion instantly.

"You are attempting mind control against the Void itself."

CRACK.

Every illusion exploded.

CRACK.

Every false reality collapsed.

CRACK.

Every mental prison shattered completely.

The enemy screamed.

Blood poured from his mouth immediately.

The backlash nearly destroyed him.

The battlefield returned.

Reality returned.

Fear returned.

The enemy finally understood.

He never stood a chance.

The Suit suddenly appeared directly before him.

No movement visible.

No warning visible.

One moment distant.

Next moment standing directly before the terrified enemy.

The fake Harris stumbled backward.

His legs shook violently.

His breathing became unstable.

His confidence disappeared entirely.

Then he screamed.

"HELP ME!"

The controlled friends remained unconscious.

Nobody answered.

Nobody moved.

Nobody came.

For the first time today...

The enemy stood alone.

Exactly like Harris suffered earlier.

The Suit stared silently.

Then pointed toward the unconscious Harris lying within the armor.

"You made them forget him."

The enemy trembled.

"You made them reject him."

The enemy collapsed onto his knees.

"You made them attack him."

Tears appeared within the enemy's eyes.

"You made him believe he lost everything."

The battlefield shook violently.

Void Energy flooded the horizon endlessly.

The enemy cried desperately.

"I'm sorry!"

The Suit stopped.

Then smiled again.

The same terrifying smile.

The same smile that greeted Beast Mode's awakening.

Then came the final words.

"You should apologize to him."

The enemy barely understood before the Suit's fist moved.

One punch.

Only one.

No grand attack.

No special technique.

No dramatic struggle.

Just one punch.

The impact erased every defense instantly.

The fake Harris screamed.

Blue light exploded outward.

The false body shattered completely.

The illusion disappeared.

The disguise vanished.

And the true enemy finally appeared.

A humanoid creature formed entirely from Blue Omega Crystal energy stood exposed before destruction consumed him completely.

Then...

The creature shattered.

Thousands of blue fragments scattered across the battlefield before merging into a single glowing crystal peacefully.

The Blue Omega Crystal.

Defeated.

The Suit silently picked it up.

Then opened a Void Portal nearby.

Without hesitation it entered.

Leaving behind unconscious friends.

A broken battlefield.

And one unconscious hero who still believed he was completely alone.

Yet the story wasn't over.

Because somewhere deep inside the Void...

The Creator had already been watching everything.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 7... 🔵 👑 ⚔️ 💔 🌌

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 7 — THE VIDEO THAT BROKE EVERY HEART

The Void Portal closed silently behind the Divine Suit while the battlefield remained covered by destruction and sorrow.

Within the endless darkness beyond reality, the Suit carried the Blue Omega Crystal toward the sacred throne carefully.

Its movements remained calm.

Its expression remained unreadable.

Yet something unusual existed within its actions now.

Not anger.

Not rage.

Respect.

The Suit stopped before the throne.

Then carefully placed the Blue Omega Crystal beside the White Crystal and Crimson Crystal already secured.

Three Omega Crystals now rested together.

Three victories.

Three nightmares survived.

Three reminders of sacrifices paid dearly by everyone throughout their dangerous journey together before.

The Suit stared toward them silently.

Then turned.

Its attention shifted toward something hidden nearby.

A small device.

Simple.

Ordinary.

Yet containing enough truth destroying countless hearts completely once revealed publicly.

Harris's phone.

Before the battle began…

Before the enemy revealed himself…

Before the attacks happened…

The Creator secretly recorded everything.

Every moment.

Every word.

Every tear.

Every wound.

Nothing escaped the recording.

Nothing.

The Suit slowly picked up the phone.

A long silence followed.

Then it opened the recording.

The screen illuminated.

And the nightmare replayed.

Jekuna punching Harris.

Harlina slapping Harris.

Koji drawing his weapon.

Lunar attacking him.

Everyone rejecting him.

Everyone forgetting him.

Everyone choosing the fake Harris instead.

The recording continued.

Showing every injury.

Every tear.

Every heartbreak.

Every lonely step.

Every shattered memory.

Every moment Harris suffered completely alone while protecting the same people hurting him unknowingly.

Even the Suit remained motionless while watching.

Then came the worst part.

The scene where Harris smiled sadly after the Suit initially refused answering him inside the throne room.

The smile looked small.

Broken.

Hopeless.

The smile of somebody abandoned by literally everyone important within his entire life suddenly and completely.

Even worse…

The recording captured his tears.

Not loud crying.

Not dramatic screaming.

Just quiet tears.

The tears of somebody trying desperately remaining strong despite carrying unbearable emotional pain completely alone without support.

That single scene felt heavier than every battle fought previously throughout their entire journey together before.

The Suit closed its eyes briefly.

Then made a decision.

The truth deserved reaching everyone.

Immediately.

Without delay.

Without excuses.

Without mercy.

The phone activated automatically.

One by one.

Every friend received the video.

Harlina.

Koji.

Lunar.

Jekuna.

Everyone.

The recording sent successfully.

Mission complete.

The Suit finally returned toward Harris's unconscious body resting nearby quietly without awareness of anything happening currently.

It looked down at him.

The real Harris.

The boy who refused harming friends despite dying.

The boy who endured rejection without hatred.

The boy who protected everyone even after losing everything.

Slowly the Suit knelt beside him.

Then something impossible happened.

The Divine Suit gently placed one hand upon Harris's head supportively.

Like a guardian.

Like a friend.

Like family.

For several moments neither moved.

Then the Suit whispered softly.

A voice nobody else heard.

"Good job."

The Void Energy surrounding the battlefield immediately began disappearing gradually from every direction around them now.

The chains restraining everyone vanished harmlessly.

The mind control shattered completely.

The Blue Omega Crystal's influence ended.

Reality returned.

Memories returned.

Truth returned.

One by one.

Everyone awakened.

Harlina opened her eyes first.

Confusion immediately filled her expression.

She looked around.

The battlefield looked unfamiliar.

Broken.

Destroyed.

Wrong.

"Why am I here?"

Nearby Koji slowly regained consciousness.

Then Lunar.

Then Jekuna.

Then everyone else.

The same confusion appeared everywhere.

Nobody remembered arriving.

Nobody remembered fighting.

Nobody remembered the fake Harris.

Nothing made sense.

Then Harlina noticed somebody lying nearby.

Her eyes widened instantly.

The world stopped.

"HARRIS!"

The scream echoed across the battlefield.

Everyone immediately turned.

Then froze completely.

Harris lay motionless.

Covered with blood.

Covered with wounds.

Covered with injuries severe enough terrifying even experienced warriors immediately upon seeing them clearly.

His breathing barely existed.

His heartbeat felt dangerously weak.

His condition looked worse than any previous battle survived before throughout their entire journey together.

Harlina ran toward him immediately.

Tears appeared before reaching him.

"Harris!"

"Harris!"

"Wake up!"

No response.

Nothing.

Absolutely nothing.

Koji arrived next.

Then Lunar.

Then Jekuna.

Then everyone else.

Silence spread instantly.

Because nobody understood.

Just yesterday Harris remained hospitalized.

Just yesterday he couldn't even walk properly.

Yet somehow...

Now he looked half-dead.

Harlina trembled violently.

"I went home..."

Koji looked shocked.

"I was investigating..."

Lunar stared blankly.

"I was with Master..."

Jekuna clenched his fists.

"I was training..."

Everybody remembered completely different events.

None connected.

None explained reality.

None explained Harris.

Then Koji noticed the phone nearby.

Still active.

Still displaying notifications.

Still showing the recently received video.

A terrible feeling entered his heart immediately.

Slowly...

He opened the recording.

The video began playing.

And within seconds...

Every face turned pale.

Because they finally saw the truth.

The nightmare replayed before their eyes.

Jekuna watched himself punching Harris.

Harlina watched herself slapping Harris.

Koji watched himself attacking Harris.

Lunar watched himself treating Harris like an enemy.

Everyone watched themselves destroying the person who loved them most.

Nobody could speak.

Nobody could breathe.

Nobody could move.

The recording continued mercilessly.

Showing every moment.

Every wound.

Every rejection.

Every tear.

Every broken smile.

Every heartbreaking second.

Then came the throne room scene.

The moment Harris cried alone after everyone forgot him completely.

Harlina collapsed immediately.

The tears wouldn't stop.

The guilt became unbearable.

She watched Harris whispering sadly.

"You too?"

After the Suit refused answering.

The sentence shattered her completely.

Because she understood something horrifying.

Harris genuinely believed absolutely everyone abandoned him.

Everyone.

Even the Suit.

Even her.

The realization destroyed her heart.

Nearby Jekuna dropped onto his knees.

Koji lowered his head.

Lunar started crying openly.

Nobody defended themselves.

Nobody made excuses.

Because excuses didn't exist.

The evidence showed everything clearly.

And every second felt like a knife twisting deeper inside their hearts mercilessly.

Meanwhile...

Unaware of everything...

Harris remained unconscious.

Still fighting darkness.

Still believing he lost everyone.

Still smiling faintly.

As if finally resting after surviving the worst day of his entire life.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 8... 💔📱🔵⚔️😭

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 8 — THREE WEEKS OF REGRET

The moment the recording ended, nobody spoke because every word felt meaningless compared with the suffering Harris endured.

The battlefield remained silent.

Not peaceful silence.

Not comfortable silence.

The silence of guilt.

The silence of heartbreak.

The silence of people realizing they accidentally became their best friend's greatest nightmare unexpectedly.

Harlina continued staring at the screen.

Again.

And again.

And again.

Unable stopping herself.

Every replay showed Harris getting rejected.

Every replay showed Harris getting hurt.

Every replay showed Harris smiling despite everything.

That smile hurt the most.

Because he never hated them.

Not once.

Even after everything.

He still protected them.

Still loved them.

Still refused hurting them.

The realization completely destroyed Harlina emotionally.

Eventually she broke down entirely.

Tears flowed endlessly.

Her hands trembled uncontrollably.

Her voice cracked repeatedly.

"I slapped him..."

The words barely escaped.

Nobody answered.

Because everybody carried similar guilt already.

Jekuna stared at his own fists silently.

The same fists that once promised protecting Harris forever.

Now those fists appeared inside the video repeatedly hurting him instead mercilessly.

"I punched him..."

His voice sounded hollow.

Broken.

Ashamed.

Koji remained completely silent.

Watching himself attack Harris felt unbearable.

A master should protect students.

A master should guide students.

A master should never become another source of suffering.

Yet there he was.

Inside the recording.

Hurting somebody he considered family.

Lunar couldn't stop crying.

The guilt overwhelmed everyone equally.

Eventually reality returned.

One fact mattered most.

Harris remained alive.

Barely.

Immediately everyone carried him toward the hospital.

The journey felt endless.

Every second increased fear.

Every weak breath terrified them.

Every heartbeat felt uncertain.

Nobody wanted imagining a world where Harris never opened his eyes again.

Especially after learning the truth.

The hospital staff rushed immediately.

Doctors surrounded him.

Machines activated.

Emergency procedures began.

Hours passed.

Then more hours.

Then an entire day.

Finally...

A doctor emerged.

Everyone stood instantly.

The answer determined everything.

The doctor sighed heavily.

"He's alive."

Relief exploded instantly.

Several people nearly collapsed from exhaustion and emotional pressure immediately after hearing those precious words finally.

Then the doctor continued.

"But..."

The relief vanished instantly.

The doctor lowered his head.

"The physical injuries are severe."

"However..."

"The emotional trauma worries us more."

Nobody spoke.

Nobody moved.

Nobody breathed.

The doctor looked directly toward them.

"He may wake eventually."

"Or he may remain trapped within unconsciousness much longer."

Those words haunted everyone immediately.

Days passed.

Then a week.

Then two weeks.

Still Harris never opened his eyes.

Still Harris never moved.

Still Harris never spoke.

Still Harris never entered anyone's mind through the familiar mental connection used previously countless times before.

Nothing.

Absolutely nothing.

The hospital room became everybody's second home.

Nobody wanted leaving.

Nobody trusted themselves leaving.

Nobody wanted Harris waking alone.

Not after everything.

Not anymore.

Harlina practically lived beside his bed.

Every morning she greeted him.

Every afternoon she spoke with him.

Every evening she held his hand.

Every night she cried quietly beside him.

Even while unconscious...

She refused leaving him alone.

Never again.

Jekuna visited constantly.

Bringing food Harris couldn't eat.

Bringing jokes Harris couldn't hear.

Bringing apologies Harris couldn't receive currently.

Yet he continued anyway.

Because stopping felt wrong.

Koji spent countless hours sitting silently nearby.

Sometimes speaking.

Sometimes remembering.

Sometimes apologizing.

Sometimes simply watching.

The guilt never disappeared.

Lunar often read adventure stories aloud.

Stories Harris previously enjoyed.

Stories about heroes overcoming impossible odds despite overwhelming suffering surrounding them constantly throughout difficult journeys before.

Everyone hoped.

Everyone prayed.

Everyone waited.

Meanwhile...

Inside the darkness of unconsciousness...

Harris dreamed.

Or perhaps wandered.

He couldn't tell.

Everything appeared distant.

Everything appeared quiet.

Everything appeared peaceful.

Strangely peaceful.

No enemies existed.

No pain existed.

No responsibilities existed.

No heartbreak existed.

Only silence.

A comforting silence.

For the first time in weeks...

He felt nothing.

And after experiencing the nightmare caused by the Blue Omega Crystal...

Nothing felt wonderful.

Occasionally faint voices reached him.

Distant.

Muffled.

Unclear.

Yet he never understood them.

Because part of him genuinely believed something already.

A simple thought.

A tragic thought.

A heartbreaking thought.

"I died."

The idea felt reasonable.

After all...

Everybody forgot him.

Everybody rejected him.

Everybody attacked him.

Then darkness arrived.

So naturally...

He assumed death followed.

Strangely...

The thought didn't upset him.

Instead...

He smiled.

A small peaceful smile.

Because if he truly died…

Then at least his friends survived.

At least Harlina survived.

At least everybody remained safe.

That alone made everything worthwhile.

Back inside reality…

Three entire weeks passed.

Three weeks of waiting.

Three weeks of regret.

Three weeks of guilt.

Three weeks of praying.

Then finally…

On a quiet morning…

Something changed.

Very slightly.

Very subtly.

Very importantly.

Harlina noticed first.

A finger moved.

Just once.

Small.

Almost invisible.

Yet real.

Her heart stopped instantly.

Then another movement.

This time stronger.

The hospital room suddenly felt alive again.

Hope returned.

Real hope.

The kind capable bringing tears immediately.

Harlina grabbed his hand tightly.

"Harris..."

Her voice trembled.

Everyone rushed inside immediately.

Koji.

Lunar.

Jekuna.

Everyone.

The room filled rapidly.

Nobody wanted missing this moment.

Not after waiting three endless weeks desperately.

Then...

Slowly...

Very slowly...

Harris opened his eyes.

And the first thing he saw...

Was everybody.

Standing there.

Watching him.

Waiting for him.

Loving him.

The sight confused him completely.

Because according to his understanding...

He should have been dead already.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 9... 💔🩸✨⚔️😭

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 9 — IS THIS HEAVEN OR HELL?

Light slowly returned to Harris's vision while countless blurry shapes gathered around him anxiously inside the hospital room.

Everything felt distant.

Everything felt slow.

Everything felt unreal.

For several moments he simply stared silently because his mind still wandered somewhere between dreams and reality.

The faces surrounding him gradually became clearer.

Harlina.

Koji.

Lunar.

Jekuna.

Everyone.

All standing there.

All staring at him.

All crying.

The sight confused him completely.

Because according to his understanding...

They forgot him.

They rejected him.

They attacked him.

Then darkness came.

Therefore...

Only one explanation existed.

Harris blinked several times slowly.

Then looked around carefully.

The hospital room appeared strangely bright.

Almost heavenly.

Almost peaceful.

Almost impossible.

Finally...

After three weeks of silence...

His voice returned.

Weak.

Hoarse.

Barely audible.

Yet every person inside the room heard it clearly.

"Am I in Heaven?"

Nobody moved.

Nobody breathed.

Several tears appeared instantly.

Harris looked around again.

Then added another possibility.

"Or Hell?"

The room completely broke.

Harlina immediately burst into tears.

Lunar covered his face.

Jekuna lowered his head.

Even Koji struggled maintaining composure.

Meanwhile Harris remained genuinely confused.

He expected answers.

Instead everybody cried harder.

The situation made absolutely no sense.

Then suddenly...

Before anybody could respond...

Every person rushed toward him simultaneously.

Harris's eyes widened instantly.

"Oh no."

Too late.

They reached him.

Then hugged him.

Tightly.

Very tightly.

Extremely tightly.

Pain exploded everywhere.

Every broken bone protested immediately.

Every healing injury screamed.

Every damaged muscle suffered.

Harris nearly died again.

"AAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!"

His scream echoed throughout the entire hospital floor immediately.

Everybody froze.

Then panicked.

Then released him instantly.

The moment looked so ridiculous that Harris almost laughed despite the overwhelming pain currently consuming him entirely.

Several nurses outside became concerned.

Doctors nearly entered.

Chaos erupted briefly.

Eventually calm returned.

Harris lay there breathing heavily.

Trying recovering from the most dangerous group hug in human history successfully somehow.

Then…

Despite everything...

A smile appeared.

A genuine smile.

The first real smile since before the Blue Omega Crystal incident happened.

He looked toward everyone.

Then joked weakly.

"Are you all trying to kill me?"

Silence.

Nobody laughed.

Nobody smiled.

Instead...

Everyone started crying again.

Harder this time.

Much harder.

The reaction confused Harris completely.

"What happened now?"

Harlina stepped forward first.

Tears continuously flowed down her face.

"We're sorry."

Harris blinked.

"For what?"

The room froze.

Nobody expected that answer.

Nobody.

Not after everything.

Not after the recording.

Not after three weeks of guilt.

Not after watching him suffer completely alone.

Yet Harris genuinely didn't understand.

Koji slowly picked up a phone nearby.

Then opened the recording.

Then handed it toward Harris carefully.

"Watch."

Harris accepted it.

Curious.

Confused.

Concerned.

Then the video started.

Minutes passed.

The room remained silent.

Nobody dared interrupt.

Nobody dared speak.

Everybody simply watched Harris watching the nightmare again from beginning until end carefully.

The hospital scene.

Jekuna's punch.

Harlina's slap.

Koji's attack.

Lunar's hostility.

The fake Harris.

The betrayal.

The loneliness.

The tears.

Everything.

Every horrifying moment replayed before his eyes again.

Eventually the recording ended.

The room became completely silent.

Everyone waited.

Everyone feared his response.

Everyone expected anger.

Expected sadness.

Expected disappointment.

Expected something.

Anything.

Instead…

Harris suddenly laughed.

Loudly.

Very loudly.

So loudly everybody became stunned immediately.

The laughter continued.

And continued.

And continued.

Finally he wiped tears from his eyes.

Not sad tears.

Laughing tears.

Then looked toward everyone.

"That's what you're apologizing for?"

Nobody understood.

Harris shrugged.

"It wasn't your fault."

"You were mind controlled."

The room froze again.

Because somehow...

The victim comforted everyone else.

Again.

Just like always.

Koji stared silently.

Jekuna looked shocked.

Lunar couldn't believe it.

Meanwhile Harlina cried even harder.

Because forgiveness somehow hurt more than anger.

Harris looked toward her immediately.

Then smiled softly.

"Harlina."

She looked up instantly.

"Coffee."

The room went silent.

Then Harris continued.

"And food."

Everybody stared.

Several seconds passed.

Then finally...

The entire room laughed.

The heavy atmosphere cracked instantly.

Hope returned.

Warmth returned.

Life returned.

For the first time since the nightmare began...

Everything felt normal again.

Almost.

Everyone immediately rushed outside.

Determined bringing food.

Determined taking care of him.

Determined never allowing him feeling alone ever again.

Meanwhile Harris remained inside.

Smiling peacefully.

Happy simply because everyone remembered him again.

A few minutes later…

The hospital room door opened.

Then opened again.

Then again.

And again.

And again.

Food arrived endlessly.

Boxes.

Bags.

Containers.

Plates.

More plates.

Even more plates.

Soon the hospital room looked less like a medical facility and more like a giant restaurant somehow.

Harris stared.

Then stared again.

Then counted silently.

Then stopped counting.

Because the amount became ridiculous.

There was enough food feeding ten people comfortably.

Maybe fifteen.

Possibly twenty.

His soul left his body briefly.

Then returned.

Slowly.

"Harlina..."

She smiled sweetly.

Too sweetly.

Dangerously sweetly.

"Yes?"

"Why?"

The smile widened.

A terrifying development.

"Because you need recovering."

Harris immediately sensed disaster approaching.

A different disaster.

A food disaster.

The most dangerous kind.

And unfortunately…

Escape remained impossible.

TO BE CONTINUED IN PART 10… 💔😂🍛💉❤️‍🩹

VOID WALKER SEASON 6 — CHAPTER 6

PART 10 — THE PEACE BEFORE THE NEXT NIGHTMARE

The moment Harlina picked up the first spoon, Harris immediately understood survival remained impossible under current circumstances today.

Not because enemies arrived.

Not because Omega Crystals attacked.

Not because monsters appeared.

Because everybody decided feeding him simultaneously.

A fate far scarier currently.

Harris attempted negotiating peacefully.

Nobody listened.

Harris attempted reasoning logically.

Nobody listened.

Harris attempted escaping.

Everybody immediately rejected the proposal unanimously without discussion or hesitation whatsoever.

The situation looked hopeless.

Very hopeless.

Harlina sat beside him carefully.

Then gently fed him.

One spoon.

Then another.

Then another.

Then another.

Then another.

The process never seemed ending.

Meanwhile everyone watched closely.

Far too closely.

Like security guards protecting precious treasure from mysterious thieves during important royal ceremonies somewhere nearby today.

Harris chewed obediently.

Then looked toward the mountain of remaining food.

Then looked toward death.

Both appeared equally threatening.

Eventually his mouth became completely full.

Absolutely full.

Entirely full.

Yet somehow…

Harlina continued.

Another spoon approached.

Then another.

Then another.

Harris's eyes widened desperately.

He physically couldn't continue.

His body surrendered completely.

His soul surrendered completely.

His stomach surrendered completely.

Yet Harlina remained unstoppable.

The others even encouraged her.

"More."

"He's still thin."

"He needs recovering."

"Keep going."

Harris couldn't believe what he heard.

These people genuinely intended feeding him forever.

Finally...

An opportunity appeared.

A tiny opportunity.

A beautiful opportunity.

The perfect opportunity.

While everyone became distracted briefly...

Harris slowly attempted escaping from the bed.

One careful movement.

Then another.

Then another.

Freedom waited nearby.

Victory approached.

Then...

A hand grabbed him.

Another hand followed.

Then another.

Then several more.

Within seconds everybody surrounded him completely.

The escape ended immediately.

Spectacularly.

Embarrassingly.

Tragically.

The next development shocked even Harris.

They tied him.

To the bed.

Using rope.

Actual rope.

The legendary Void Walker.

The conqueror of impossible battles.

The destroyer of countless enemies.

Defeated by friendship and rope.

History would never respect him again.

Harris stared blankly toward the ceiling.

Questioning every life decision leading toward this exact moment currently.

Eventually he sighed dramatically.

Then spoke honestly.

"At this rate, I might die."

Silence.

The room froze.

Everybody's expressions changed instantly.

Dangerously.

Very dangerously.

Harris immediately realized his mistake.

Unfortunately…

Too late.

Jekuna slapped him.

Lunar slapped him.

Another friend slapped him.

Then another.

Then another.

A chain reaction began.

The hospital room transformed into a punishment chamber instantly.

Because Harris remained tied, he couldn't even protect his cheeks from the incoming justice currently approaching relentlessly.

"OW!"

Another slap.

"STOP!"

Another slap.

"PLEASE!"

Another slap.

The suffering continued.

Finally...

Only one person remained.

Harlina.

The room became silent.

Everybody stepped aside respectfully.

The final boss approached.

Harris swallowed nervously.

Then…

SLAP.

The impact echoed heroically throughout the room.

Harris nearly saw another dimension briefly.

His soul visited it.

Then returned.

Slowly.

Painfully.

Harlina glared at him.

Her eyes contained tears.

Real tears.

"Never say those words again."

The room became quiet.

Harris finally understood.

They weren't angry.

They were afraid.

Terrified.

Because three weeks earlier they nearly lost him forever.

The realization softened his expression immediately.

Then he smiled gently.

"Okay."

The tension disappeared instantly.

Several people cried again.

Several laughed.

Several did both simultaneously.

Evening eventually arrived.

Yet nobody left.

Not one person.

Not even for a moment.

Everybody remained nearby.

Watching him.

Talking with him.

Laughing with him.

Protecting him.

Harris became increasingly embarrassed.

Especially because Harlina remained there continuously.

Every time their eyes met…

His face became red immediately.

Every single time.

Meanwhile everyone noticed.

Nobody remained quiet about it.

Which made everything worse.

Night eventually arrived.

Still nobody left.

Harris finally realized something important.

At this rate...

Privacy would never exist again.

Therefore a plan became necessary.

A very careful plan.

A very intelligent plan.

A very desperate plan.

Eventually he called Jekuna closer.

"Jekuna."

"Yeah?"

"Go home."

Jekuna blinked.

"Why?"

Harris immediately started sweating.

Because explaining the real reason remained impossible.

Especially with Harlina nearby.

Therefore...

He improvised.

Poorly.

"I need only one caretaker."

Everyone looked suspicious.

Very suspicious.

Then Harris continued.

"You all watching constantly prevents proper rest."

The excuse sounded reasonable.

Surprisingly reasonable.

Then disaster struck.

Because Harris added another sentence.

"Harlina should go too."

The room froze.

Harlina froze.

Jekuna froze.

Reality froze.

Even time itself considered leaving briefly.

Harlina slowly turned toward Jekuna.

The expression on her face terrified him instantly.

Jekuna looked like a man witnessing death personally approaching from nearby currently.

Within seconds he stood.

"I'M GOING HOME."

Nobody stopped him.

Nobody blamed him.

Everybody understood survival instincts.

One by one everyone finally left.

Until only two remained.

Harris.

And Harlina.

Silence filled the room.

Then...

SLAP.

Another one.

Harris almost cried.

"WHY?"

Harlina folded her arms.

"Oh?"

"So Jekuna should care for you instead?"

Harris immediately revealed the truth.

Every single detail.

Every embarrassing detail.

Every shy detail.

Everything.

The explanation lasted several minutes.

By the end...

Harlina's face became completely red.

Then somehow became redder.

A scientific impossibility.

Yet it happened.

Harris suddenly started crying softly.

Not from pain.

Not from sadness.

From happiness.

Harlina noticed immediately.

"Why are you crying?"

His answer came quietly.

"I haven't really seen you for four weeks."

"One week because of the enemy."

"Three weeks because of the coma."

The room became silent.

Then Harlina hugged him tightly.

Much more carefully this time.

Harris attempted hugging back.

His arms refused cooperating completely.

His injuries remained severe.

Noticing this...

Harlina hugged him even tighter instead.

Tears appeared within both their eyes.

"I thought I lost everyone."

His voice cracked.

For the first time since awakening...

The truth finally escaped.

All the hidden fear.

All the hidden pain.

All the hidden loneliness.

Everything.

Harlina held him closer.

Then whispered softly.

"How do you think you'll ever escape us?"

A laugh escaped Harris immediately.

A real laugh.

A peaceful laugh.

Eventually they fell asleep together.

Holding each other.

No enemies.

No battles.

No fear.

Only peace.

Morning arrived quietly.

Harris woke first.

Then gently woke Harlina.

"Coffee."

She laughed immediately.

Another day began.

Weeks passed.

Recovery continued.

Eventually...

Two months later...

Harris finally returned home.

The moment he opened the door...

"WELCOME HOME!"

Everyone appeared instantly.

The surprise nearly stopped his heart.

Decorations filled the house.

Food covered tables.

Laughter filled every corner.

For several moments Harris simply stood silently.

Then smiled.

A deep smile.

Because he understood something.

He almost lost this.

He almost lost all of this.

And now...

It returned.

The celebration continued late into the evening joyfully.

Eventually everyone left.

Leaving Harris and Harlina alone.

Later they stood together upon the terrace.

The night sky stretched endlessly above.

The Omega Crystals remained on Harris's mind.

The remaining fragments.

The coming dangers.

The future.

Then suddenly...

SLAP.

Harris looked toward Harlina.

She pointed toward the house.

"Refresh."

"Sleep."

"Now."

Harris laughed.

Then obeyed.

After dinner they fed each other happily.

Like old times.

Like family.

Like home.

For the first time in months...

Everything felt normal.

The next morning arrived peacefully.

They woke smiling.

Prepared coffee together.

Then sat quietly.

Simply enjoying each other's presence.

Then...

CRASH.

The sound shattered the morning.

Breaking glass echoed outside.

Immediately Harris stood.

His instincts activated instantly.

Something was wrong.

Very wrong.

He rushed outside.

Then froze.

Hundreds of civilians surrounded the area.

Their expressions contained anger.

Hatred.

Fear.

Violence.

Before Harris understood anything…

The attacks began.

Stones.

Objects.

Weapons.

Everything.

Several strikes landed immediately.

Harris suffered injuries instantly.

Harlina arrived behind him.

Confused.

Terrified.

"HARRIS!"

Without hesitation he lifted her.

Then flew directly toward the Throne.

Calling Koji and everyone simultaneously.

Moments later everybody gathered.

Confusion spread everywhere.

Then somebody pointed toward a giant broadcast screen nearby.

Everyone looked.

And froze.

The screen displayed Harris's face.

Below it appeared terrifying words.

WANTED CRIMINAL

RESPONSIBLE FOR VOID MONSTER ATTACKS

THREAT TO THE ENTIRE CITY

The world became silent.

Harlina stared.

Koji stared.

Lunar stared.

Everyone stared.

Meanwhile Harris looked toward the broadcast.

His expression slowly hardened.

Because somebody had started another game.

Another nightmare.

Another trap.

And this time...

The entire city stood against him.

The season ended with Harris staring toward the screen while one terrifying question echoed endlessly within his mind.

"Who is framing me?"

TO BE CONTINUED IN SEASON 7...

THE OMEGA CRYSTAL HUNT CONTINUES...

BY HARRIS RAVI ⚔️ 🔵 👑 💔 🌌 📖